No departure that the war has foreshadowed is as significant so far as the dominions are concerned, as that of which notice was given last night by Andrew Bonar Law, secretary for the colonies, when he announced that the dominions were to have a voice in peace negotiations and intimated that the question of this being permanently extended to give them a voice in imperial government was being considered at Westminster. Whether the latter development is realized in the near future or not, the other is apparently assured and there is cause for double gratification in it, first, on the ground that the dominions all feel that they are entitled to a voice in the settlement of the war, and secondly, in that the British government is extending it to them without any suggestion from the outside.

The dominions can feel entitled to this enlargement of their responsibility in the war because they are treating the struggle not as a danger that is threatening the Motherland Country and in which they are in duty bound to give her assistance, but as a menace against the whole Empire which they, as parts of the Empire, must do their share to remove. Canada no longer looks upon her share in the war as the extension of a helping hand towards the Old Country. She feels that she is fighting for herself and in the term "herself" she includes every land over which the British flag waves. The day is long since past when we looked upon England's struggles against foreign foes as concerns of England alone in which we, out of loyalty to her, could send a helping contingent. In the Britain of to-day, it is not a matter of loyalty to England, but loyalty to the Empire of which we are a part.

That this fact is being realized in the Old Country may be gathered from three striking sentences in an article by L. March Phillips, in the latest issue of "Land and Water":

New Zealand [illegible] Britain [illegible] Australia [illegible] Britain [illegible] Canada [illegible] Britain [illegible] Africa [illegible] Britain [illegible] Under the Union Jack [illegible] Empire.

It cannot be forgotten that [illegible] are not United [illegible] were fought with such heroism at Ypres [illegible] and the Irish were fighting in precisely the same cause and for the same reasons as the American recruits who joined the British infantry at Bunker's Hill. To [illegible] is not a Power to assert in Europe unfriendly hostile to liberty and of such formula to strength and resources as to command [illegible] very existence.

I know [illegible] share [illegible] of the British Empire [illegible].

Perhaps no more advantageous treaty of peace will be achieved through the voice of the dominions and yet it is quite possible that there may be such a result. The attitude of the outlying parts of the Empire towards international relations differs from that of the Old Country. Undoubtedly England under [illegible] such things rather than we do, and yet her proximity to Europe, with [illegible] power [illegible] many minor considerations [illegible] her to look other and equally important issues. We [illegible] desperate and costly struggles England has ever been generous to the defeated foe generous to the point, as history has shown, where she neglects her own best interests. The dominions are of a slightly different temperament, and their influence may possibly make for peace terms that will be more binding in the way of tying up the military ambitions of Europe for the future.

It would be foolish to suppose that the British government would make this extension of authority to the dominions in form and not in spirit. Having extended to them the privilege of speaking in the negotiations for peace, it will listen attentively. And the voice of the dominions should not be small, because undoubtedly they will all speak to the same end.

Upon the result of this departure will rest the suggestion for closer unity in imperial government, but that can be left to take care of itself for the present.

LOCAL ALL STARS BLANKED DON VALLEY LEAGUE LEADERS

Those citizens who remained at home yesterday to see the local All Stars perform against the fast St. Paul's of Toronto, at Rivercrest Park, were not disappointed if they expected to see a good game. The Peterborough team won by the score of 9 to 0, shutting out the Don Valley League leaders.

The visitors did not have their crack battery, Dumas and Cantield, and Doxee, pitching for Toronto, allowed eight hits.

For Peterborough, Huycke and Swanston performed in fine style. Huycke struck out eight St. Paul's swatsmen and gave four hits, and was steady in the pinches. He also got great support.

Sam Manson, Tiger Star, Is Joining Sportsman's Battery

Local athletes are taking a great interest in the sportsmens battery which is to be formed here. The members of the Hamilton Rowing Club have decided almost to a man to join the new unit and Captain E. V. Wright has had several applications from athletes and their friends. The battery will be in command of officers who have all gained fame in some line or other on the field of sport, and it promises to be the most popular military organization that has yet been formed in Hamilton. Sam Manson, the famous football star and oar-man, is one of the men who has signified his intention of joining, and a number of other football and baseball players are expected to fall into line. The players in the city baseball league will also make a good showing on the roll of the new battery, and it promises to be up to full strength within a very short time, as the athletes and their friends are realizing that they should be able to respond to the call at a moments notice. Athletes wishing to join should consult Captain E. V. Wright of Morris and Wright

Dutch Increase Their Army From 330,000 to 550,000 Men

London, August 10. In Dutch official circles America's reply to the Austro-Hungarian note protesting against the export of ammunition from the United States, is awaited with intense interest. Holland is just now making herculean efforts to strengthen it defences against possible aggression on the part of any one of the belligerent powers. No doubt is entertained here that this neutral, pacific little kingdom will fight to the last gasp before it will permit the violation of its neutrality.

Under a new law just enacted it has called to the colours practically every man capable of carrying a rifle. The total of the immediately available force having been raised from 300,000 to 550,000, the problem of providing ammunition for the increased army has become one of critical urgency. Having no ammunition factories of her own, she is absolutely dependent on what she can import.

According to the Dutch contention, the adoption by the United States of a regulation forbidding the export of munitions would practically foreclosm not only Holland, but every other small neutral power, to certain defeat at the hands of any powerful and well-prepared nation which might choose to attack it.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

Buying of steel to be rolled into bars for the manufacture of high explosive shells here and in Europe, was heavy again last week, aggregating 75,000 tons. Domestic business, however, outside of structural work, was not impressive.

Among the largest contracts closed were 25,000 tons of billets for 2,000,000 shells for Russia to be made in New Jersey, shipment over the 3rd quarter of 1915 and the whole of 1916. 1,200 tons bars for the manufacture of 20,000 four and a half inch shells for Great Britain; 25,000 tons billets to be rolled into bars in Europe for 2,000,000 shells for France; 10,000 tons of bars to be rolled in New England for export; 30,000 tons four pointed barbed wire for the war zone, and 10,000 tons steel crop ends for Italy

A DECREASE.

A decrease of twenty-five per cent. in the volume of dealings in stocks last week as compared with the preceding week, was largely due to lessened activity in the war contract issues, transactions in such issues as Crucible Steel and Westinghouse, for instance, shrinking more than one-half.

A statistician has patiently calculated that the increasing market value of three score stocks of companies that do or could manufacture war munitions, explosives or equipment, as equipment, as compared with a year ago, exceeds $750,000,000. This would seem equal to good profits on an even larger volume of "war contracts" than is mentioned in current excited rumors, definite information being unobtainable.

Exit the C.P.R. dividend uncertainty.

Ames-Holden common seemed to strike a snag around 16.

There are enough really good ones without taking up the "cats and dogs."

Dealing in some of those Wall street "explosives" looks like a dangerous pastime.

Market activity in a stock doesn't always indicate that the public is buying it

THE STONEY LAKE REGATTA WAS A BRILLIANT SUCCESS

Programme of Keenly Contested Aquatic Sports at Juniper Island — Large Crowds Gathered From Every Part of Kawarthadom.

SPLENDID DANCE IN EVENING

The annual regatta at Juniper Island, held under the auspices of the Stoney Lake Cottagers' Association, once more scored a brilliant success. The entire population of Stoney Lake gathered at Juniper, which was augmented by large crowds from Peterborough and Lakefield, coming up on the steamers "Stoney Lake" and Empress," and from Sturgeon Point and Bobcaygeon per steamer "Lintonia." The fact that yesterday was civic holiday at Peterborough and Lakefield added largely to the number in attendance.

The Stoney Lake colony came in every variety of craft—launches, both steam and gasoline, large and small, many of them with a "tail" in town—down to the skiff and canoe, and even the old reliable punt.

The weather conditions were anything but favourable. The morning promised nothing, and, even early in the afternoon, the weather man kept hanging out his storm signals. A few drops about three o'clock marred the pleasure of those in their "ice creams," but those in their camping togs scarcely noticed the intrusion. Along about six, however, a smart shower passed over the lake, but the gatta proper, was over, so what did it matter?

The skippers of the sailing craft wore a happy smile because a heavy wind prevailed from the west, but during the race it proved very unsteady, coming at times in strong gusts, which made the "perches" of the moveable ballast very uncertain.

The "Cygnet," with skipper J. S. Knapman at the "stick," won for the n-th time the open sailing race. For a number of years this speedy sailing yacht has been managed by his son, Harold Knapman, who was everywhere recognized as the champion of Stoney Lake, but war, and its ravages, has made many a change, and Harold who is now in training at Kingston for service overseas, will naturally feel proud that his boat came in first with his father at the helm.

Other faces, particularly to those who have followed the regattas from year to year, were absent from the number of the contestants: one Heber Rogers, who is a prisoner in Germany, and Murray Carlisle, who is serving our King in the medical corps.

The power boat race always proves the centre of attraction at any regatta. This year there were two entries: one, the "Hasty," owned by Mr. William Rosenburg of Bobcaygeon, the other the "Greyhound," owned by Mr. Gordon Fraser of Stoney Lake. The Rosenburg boat is a 32 footer, built in Bobcaygeon, and powered with a 50 h.p. Van Blerck. The Fraser boat is a 30 footer, built in Hamilton, and powered with a 2-36 H.P. Red Wing motor.

The race was an easy one for the "Hasty," the "Greyhound" having become stalled on the course.

The programme — twenty-three events in all—was run off with the usual dispatch, with Douglas Carlisle and Dr. George Zimmerman at the megaphone. Dr. Morrison presided as judge, while Mr. Wyndham Eddis made a very careful and painstaking secretary. The Hon. Lawrence Grahame acted as starter, relieved now and then by H. G. Fitzgerald.

A pleasing feature of the afternoon was the presence of pretty flower girls who lent colour to the scene, and incidentally "roped-in" many a stray nickel to swell the funds of the Red Cross Society. They operated from a central depot in the government pavilion in charge of the ladies of the Red Cross, who were delighted to report the receipt of over sixty-five dollars.

In the evening the presentation of prizes took place in the pavilion, which was followed by the usual dance, with music provided by the Asa Huycke orchestra.

The following is a list of the results:

Regatta Ripples.

Light lunches on heavy stomachs were the prevailing style between five and six p.m.

The new flag and flag pole at Juniper made their debut August ninth, nineteen-fifteen.

A black sailing craft from Lake Simcoe kept showing its double centreboard as it kept grazing the end of Mr. Cole's island.

Next regatta, it may be necessary for the young ladies to bring along their birth certificate.

Messrs. Knapman and Brownscombe came in handy whenever a "frog" developed at the small end of the megaphone on the judge's stand.

Jitney service between McCracken's Landing and Juniper was managed by C. Kelman of Peterborough, while that between Kawartha Park and Juniper was attended to by Norman Patterson and "Myrtle."

Mr. George Zimmerman has discovered a new mental disease called "Always-in-the-road-itis," which might be applied to those troublesome people who find the lake so small that they are always on the course, much to the discomfort of the contestants and megaphone operators.

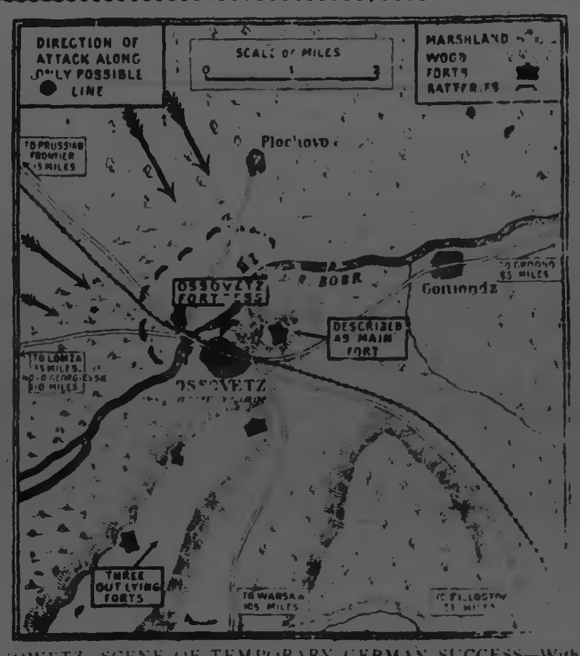
HOCKEY

Just what the prospects are for hockey in Woodstock next season are not yet definitely known. But it is a fact that a number of last year's players have left the city, and among these one of the greatest little goal tenders that ever wore a Woodstock uniform, Chilton, Childs, who is to play in Berlin this season. He has been absent from the city for some time having secured a good position in Berlin and as the first of August is the date by which players must be residents of the place where they are eligible to play, Childs is lost to Woodstock.—Woodstock Sentinel.



OSSOWETZ—SCENE OF TEMPORARY GERMAN SUCCESS—Within a few miles of the Prussian border, this fortress besieged for over four months is still safe from the enemy, though Petrograd tells of terrific assaults on it. The resistance of this fort is a thorn in the flesh of the enemy.

MOONLIGHT

He shut his book and yawned and rose
And wound the clocks and said—
"Night's getting shorter. Well, it's time
All good folks were in bed."
And pa rocked up, pert, as could be,
"You needn't hurry, pa," said she.

And pa he laughed "The boys all home?"
"Yes—they're all upstairs." "Well—ho Where's Lily Anne?" I heard her at
The gate, an hour ago."
Ma went on knitting. "She's there yet—she's chatting with young Jim Baudette."

"Now what on earth—" He fetched her home
From singing class. "Why blame" she had her brothers—" Ma said, "Yes—
But—that's not quite the same
I had my brothers still, you see,
You always would catch up to me."

"You were a woman grown!" "So's Lil.
She's nineteen, birthday gone.
"I was a man!" "Oh, Jim will be
This August twenty-one.
Maybe I never stayed out late,
When you were leaning on my gate."

But pa kept frowning—"This won't do—
There's got to be some law—
You call her in, you tell her so."
"What?
I wonder at you, pa!
I won't insult my girl, my Lil,
But there—Jim's going now keep still!"

"You never did see such a moon!"
Lil's cheeks were flaming red.
"Come out and look!" Ma says, "It's late."
Pa says, "It's time for bed."
And then, the two old lovers smiled
"Ah—we seen just such moons, dear child!"

The Doctor's Family

It is part of the Doctor's duty more than for most professional men, to keep up appearances. His family enjoys a high standard of living extra comforts and good living become a habit with them.

If anything happens the doctor—and there are dangers in the medical profession how will his family meet the change in their mode of living? Luxuries have become necessities to them. The loss of even these will to some extent mean hardship. The sum of money left out of the doctor's savings may well prove inadequate.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

Louvain District—Part II.

A woman employed as servant by an old gentleman living in the Rue de la Station, tells the story of her master's death. "We had supper at noon, about 2 o'clock, but two German officers who were staying at the house did not come into supper that night. My master went to bed at 8 o'clock, and so did his son. The servants went to bed at half-past 9. Soon after I got to my bedroom I saw out of my room flames from some burning house near by. I roused my master and his son. As they came downstairs they were seized by German soldiers, and both were tied up and led out, my master being tied with a rope and his son with a chain. They were dragged outside. I did not actually see what happened outside, but heard subsequently that my master was bayoneted and shot, and that his son was killed by a rifle shot. I was kept in the kitchen, where I was, and was present at the burial of my master and his son, thirteen days later. German soldiers came back into the house and poured some inflammable liquid over the floors and set fire to it. I escaped by another staircase to that which my master and son had descended."

On the 25th (Wednesday) in the city of Louvain, massacre, fire and destruction went on. The University, with its library, the Church of St. Peter, and many houses were set on fire and burnt to the ground. Citizens were shot and others taken prisoners and compelled to go with the troops. Soldiers went through the streets, saying: "Man hat geschossen." (They have been shooting). One soldier was seen going along shooting in the air.

Many of the people hid in the cellars, but the soldiers shot down through the gratings. Some citizens were shot on opening the doors, others in endeavouring to escape. Among other persons whose houses were burnt was an old man of ninety lying dangerously ill, who was taken out on his mattress and left lying in the garden all night. He died shortly after in the hospital, to which a friend took him the following morning.

On Thursday, the 27th, orders were given that everyone should leave the city, which was to be razed to the ground. Some citizens, including a canon of the Cathedral, with his aged mother, were ordered to go to the station and afterwards to take the road to Tirlemont. Among the number were about twenty priests from Louvain. They were insulted and threatened, but ultimately allowed to go free and make their way as best they could, women and sick persons among them, to Tirlemont. Other groups of prisoners from Louvain were on the same day taken by other routes, some early in the morning, through various villages in the direction of Malines, with hands tightly bound by cord. More prisoners were afterwards added, and all made to stay the night in the Church at Capenhout. Next day, the 28th, this group then consisted of about 1,000 men, women and children were taken back to Louvain. The houses along the road were burning, and many dead bodies of civilians, men and women, were seen on the way. Some of the principal streets in Louvain had on that time been burnt out. The prisoners were placed in a large building on the cavalry exercise ground. One woman went mad, some children died, babies were born. On the 29th the prisoners were marched off to the Malines road and at Herent the women and children and men over 40 were allowed to go; the others were taken to Boort Meerbeek, 15 kilometres from Malines and told to march straight to Malines or be shot. At 11 p.m. they reached the fort of Wechem, and were at first fired upon by the sentries; but on calling out they were Belgians, were allowed to pass. These prisoners were practically without food from early morning on the 26th until midnight on the 29th. Of the corpses seen on the road some had their hands tied behind their backs, others were burnt, some had been killed by blows, and some corpses were those of children who had been shot.

Another witness, a man of independent means, was arrested at noon by the soldiers of the 165 Regiment, and taken to the Place de la Station. He was grossly ill-treated on the way and robbed by an officer of his purse and keys. His hands were tied behind his back. His wife was kept a prisoner on the other side of the station. [illegible] with about 500 other prisoners until midnight, slept in the rain that night, and next day, having had no food since leaving Louvain, was taken to the church in Rotselaer, where there were then about 1,500 prisoners confined, including some infants. No food was given, only some water. Next day they were taken through Wespelaer and back to Louvain. On the way from Rotselaer to Wespelaer 50 bodies were seen, some naked and carbonised and unrecognisable. When they arrived at Louvain the Fish Market, the Place Marguerite, the Cathedral, and many other buildings were on fire. In the evening about 100 men, women and children were put in horse trucks, from which the dung had not been removed, and at 6 next morning left for Cologne.

The wife of this witness was also taken prisoner with her husband and her maid, but was seperated from him, and she saw other ladies made to walk before the soldiers with their hands above their heads. One, an old lady of eighty-five (name given)—was dragged from her cellar, and taken with them to the station. They were kept there all night, but set free in the morning. Thursday, but shortly afterwards sent to Tirlemont on foot. A number of corpses were seen on the way. The prisoners, of whom there are said to have been thousands, were not allowed even to have water to drink, although there were streams on the way from which the soldiers drank. Witness was given some milk at a farm, but as she raised it to her lips it was taken away from her.

A priest was taken on Friday morning, August 28th, and placed at the head of a number of refugees from Wygmael. He was led through Louvain, abused and ill-treated and placed with some thousands of other people in the riding school in the Rue du Manege. The glass roof broke in the night from the heat of burning buildings round. Next day the prisoners were marched through the country with an armed guard. Burnt farms and burnt corpses were seen on the way. The prisoners were finally separated into three groups, and the younger men marched through Herent and Bueken to Campenhout, and ultimately reached the Belgian lines about midnight on Saturday, August 30th. All the houses in Herent, a village of about 3,000 inhabitants, had been burnt.

Massacre of the inhabitants of Louvain and surrounding districts and the journey of prisoners to Cologne will appear in Evening Examiner, August 11th.

FRANCE TO SPEND MILLIONS TO FEED CIVIL POPULATION

PARIS, Aug. 9.—The Chamber of Deputies passed a bill making an appropriation of $24,000,000 to be used in the purchase of wheat and flour for feeding the civil population. The limit of such purchases is set at $40,000,000.

The bill authorizes purchases under the control of the Ministers of Commerce to requisition wheat and flour in France and empowers the Ministers of Commerce to make purchases in the colonies or abroad, and [illegible]

[illegible] Secretary of War, M. [illegible] Supplies, speaking in the Chamber, frankly admitted that [illegible] waste and disorder [illegible] the French army supplies, but declared the Chamber [illegible] was well under way.

An attempt by the socialists to inject a [illegible] during a government [illegible] was defeated by a vote of 364 to 148.

TURKS ABOLISHING EUROPEAN LANGUAGES

Even Medical Prescriptions Must Be Written in Turk Characters

Constantinople, August 3 (by courier to Dedeagatch, thence by cable.)—In a determined effort to eradicate from the Ottoman Empire all traces of things European, the Young Turks have just ordered the removal of all business signs written in either Latin or Roman characters. Only Turkish characters can be used hereafter in signs and advertisements. The same order applies to druggists' prescriptions.

The order became effective yesterday, and Constantinople arose to-day to find herself the greatest labyrinth of mystery in the world. Two-thirds of the city's 1,500,000 inhabitants are Greeks, Armenians, Jews, and natives of other countries. They have a slight speaking knowledge of the Turkish tongue but know little of the Turkish printed characters. Strangers found it exceedingly difficult to get about, and the average citizen could not tell from its sign whether the building harboured a hotel or stable.

The removal of the European language was continued all yesterday, several thousand men being employed. No line of business was exempted. Even doctors and lawyers were compelled to take down their brass plates and substitute Turkish characters or go without them. Most of the foreign professional men who could not read their own names printed in Turkish, chose the latter course.

U. S. FIRMS HARD HIT.

American firms were hard hit. Standard Oil, the Singer Sewing Machine Co., and typewriter concerns, had thousands of signs and advertisements all over the city printed in English and west European languages. In some instances they saved their signs by obliterating the English words, and leaving only pictures of sewing machines or typewriters on their poster.

The pharmacists made vain efforts to convince the government that the carrying out of the order would endanger the health of the community. They pointed out that all the medical formulas had their base in the Latin language and said it would be impossible to overturn the precedents of centuries. The government in reply invited the pharmacists to keep their prescriptions and their bottle labels in Turkish or go out of business.

Another section of the order prohibited children from wearing sailors' caps, bearing on their bands the name of any battleship save one in the Turkish fleet.

German and Austrian merchants obtained one slight concession. They were permitted to have their signs written in the language of their countries provided Gothic and not Roman or Latin characters were used.

108 Belgian Children Arrive in New York

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Again the devastation of Belgium, the country whose citizens stand out as the most heroic figures of the present European conflict, was brought to mind yesterday when the steamship Tyndam, of the Holland-American line, arrived at her pier in Hoboken from Rotterdam. On board were 108 Belgian refugees, eighty of whom were children, whose husbands, fathers and relatives already are in this country seeking a livelihood and who were driven from their native land by what they term the "atrociousness of the Germans and the danger of starvation.

Like the shepherd with his sheep, the Rev. Henry Scoen, pastor of the Belgian parish of Detroit, Mich., who went to Belgium on March 6, was in charge of the wanderers. He had experienced great difficulties in getting passage from the German government to allow the refugees to come to the United States.

Mrs. Odile de Vuyst, who said she was a nurse of Alost declared that the reports of German atrocities had not been exaggerated. She told of many incidents in hich she herself figured and of the killing of women and children by the German troops.

"I saw one incident," said Mrs. De Vuyst, who spoke good English, "which I will never forget. A column of German troops approached a little home along the road where a child was playing in the garden. A private entered the yard and killed the child with his bayonet. The mother, hysterical, offered resistance and tried to fight the soldier. She, too, was killed. There was no excuse for the slaughter."

French Army Is Ready When the Orders Come For the "Great Drive"

Men and Horses Are in Excellent Condition and Roads Are Kept Up to Peace Standard For Swift Movement of Troops and Supplies

That the French army is in excellent condition for moving when the order comes for "the great drive," that there is no sign of discouragement and that the country's military roads are in excellent condition maintained in times of peace are the assurances that are given to friends and relatives in this country by officers who are now on the advance lines.

France, which has the most perfect system of road maintenance on the Continent, has kept these fine highways in almost perfect condition ever since the war began, so men and supplies may be moved at the least discomfort and greatest saving of time. Numerous letters from the trenches and from the men who are doing not the actual fighting but the necessary work for the perfect mobility of the army have been received in the office of Frederic R. Coudert, the authority on international law.

One of the latest communications comes from Captain Jean de Pulligny, chief engineer of roads and bridges in the French army, and it contains a slight indication of the quiet thoroughness with which the French generals are taking care of the important details that go to make up the whole complex problem of moving an army. Captain de Pulligny says in a letter:

"I can assure you in all sincerity that there is not a trace of impatience or discouragement in the army. We are awaiting the day when we will get the order for the great drive, persuaded meanwhile that the proper moment has not yet come and that our chiefs will determine properly when it does come.

"Our whole organization is in perfect condition—food excellent, clothes, materials, tools, everything that we ask for is given to us.

"Horses and men are in great condition, inwardly and outwardly, and I believe getting better treatment than in many cases they got at home. My little army of road-builders now comprises 700 men, 252 horses, 150 carts 16 cannon automobiles and two driving automobiles with which to make my inspection tours, with a telephone in my office."

Mr. Coudert has received other letters from officers and others directly concerned with the movement and equipment of the armies in the field. His letter from the French officer follows the officer's stay in this country. He came here several years ago on a mission from the French government to establish a school of engineering wherein young French students for the army could come here, inspect and see the workings of the great American engineering works, and latest development of the engineer corps in the United States army.

GERMANY MAKES OFFER OF PEACE BUT IT IS REJECTED BY RUSSIA

Proposal Was Sent to Czar Nicholas Through the King of Denmark

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8. — There is good reason to believe that within the past week the Kaiser has proposed peace to Russia. The Bourse Gazette says that an overture has been made to the Czar through the King of Denmark. Needless to say, Russia emphatically declined to consider the offer.

To the failure of the German military power to envelop Russia's Vistula armies there has been added, therefore, the failure of her diplomacy to detach Russia from her allies.

Russia every day is putting herself better into shape for beginning the war over again and carrying it this time to a successful conclusion. The Government has conceded the right of speech to the members of the Duma, and has allowed the leaders of industry to take part in the reorganization which is required to produce what the army needs.

The Ministers are urged to go a step further by releasing workmen from certain restrictions heretofore in force and associating them with the great national task of regeneration.

The report that Germany had made peace proposals to Russia became known in official circles here several days ago, and was freely discussed in the lobbies of the Duma, according to the Vechernee Vremya. "We learn on good authority," says the newspaper, "that Germany through Denmark proposed to Russia separate peace, Russia to receive Galicia, while Germany would retain the western district of Poland. A representative of the Foreign Office categorically denied that there was the remotest possibility of any peace negotiations. In the lobbies of the Duma the proposal was dismissed as unworthy of serious consideration."

ITALIANS MOUNT GUNS ON CRAG 10,000 FEET UP

Rome, via Paris, Aug. 9.—The following official statement dated August 8, has been given out by Italian General Headquarters:

"In the Tonale Pass zone our Alpine detachments, advancing boldly along a difficult ridge of rocks which rises from the south over Val Del Monte (Noce), surprised and dispersed on the morning of the 7th, troops of the enemy entrenched southeast of the peak of Ercavallo, who were driven from their position by the accurate fire of our mountain artillery which had been hoisted to a height of more than 10,000 feet on the crags of Ercavallo.

"In the Valley of Sexten in Cadore after careful preparation by our medium in calibre artillery during the past few days our infantry advanced gradually,' forcing back the enemy and reached from Monte Nero as far as the southern slopes of Burestall, where they have been reinforced.

"On the Carso plateau yesterday, the enemy with the object of hampering the progress of our approach works launched weak, but frequent counter-attacks which were immediately repulsed. He had tried to stretch wire entanglements before our lines.

"Our artillery bombarded a column of the enemy on the march from Devetaki to the front. By accurate fire it also caused explosions and outbreak of flames in the neighbourhood of Marcontigna."

$20 For Tobacco Fund At Viamede "Mask"

VIAMEDE, Aug. 8.—The masquerade held on Friday evening for the Overseas Tobacco Fund, was a huge success. The Viamede pavilion was filled to overflowing with masqueraders and spectators.

The success of this masquerade and the one held on Tuesday night, was due largely to the efforts of Miss Audrey Morine.

The judges as before had a great difficulty in making the awards of prizes owing to the number of pretty costumes.

The judges, who were Mrs. (Col.) MacQueen of Toronto, Miss Baird and Miss Hall, of Fayetteville, N.Y., awarded the prizes as follows:

1st—Mr. Wm., Kay, Toronto, as Mutt.

2nd—Miss Ralston, Columbus, as Jeff.

3rd—Miss Stella Shearer, Keene as an Indian Princess.

Col. MacQueen presented the prizes in a very happy manner.

Mr. Micks, of Peterboro sold the tickets, and Mr. Ross, of Toronto had charge of the door. The receipts were $20.10, less $1 for expenses.

Mutt and Jeff were the central figures of the evening.

Voice of The People

WHO CARRIES THE BURDEN?

To the Editor:

We spend about one hundred million dollars in drink every year and about the same amount in food and clothing. If the money spent in liquor were spent in food and clothing it would give employment to about eight times as many workmen and we would hear nothing of men being out of employment. It would require about seven million dollars worth of raw material and so farmers, merchants and all classes would share in the benefit.

Of course we receive a large revenue from the liquor traffic but it has been shown that it costs us as much as we receive in revenue to pay for the poverty, crime, child destitution, insanity, and so on, caused by drink. Who pays for all this? The working man, of course, who produces all wealth. He has to pay his taxes even when the rich man often evades a large portion. The working man carries on his back all non-producers and of course those who have to be cared for by the state are non-producers. Thus the working man is paying to support the bar room even though he is a total abstainer.

We hear a great deal about personal liberty, but in this country there is no such thing as absolute liberty. A man may not wear his wife's clothes, spit on the sidewalk, or even kill himself. If he succeeds in killing himself Billy Sunday says that he will go to hell, and if he fails he will be sent to jail. We have very stringent laws against the use of certain drugs that are not nearly as harmful, and if a majority of the people decide that the bar room dispenses poison, the bar room will have to go.

A Timely Suggestion For Convalescent Home

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Would it not be a nice idea to purchase the home of the late Major Burnett to be used as a convalescent home for Peterborough soldiers who are returning home sick or wounded?

The property is an excellent one, not from the city, where quiet, rest and fresh air may be obtained, and it would help to keep alive the memory of one of the bravest men and best of soldiers that Peterborough can lay claim to.

Yours truly,

One Interested.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The special men's meeting in the parlours on Sunday afternoon had an attendance of over 80.

Evangelist Sharpe gave a very practical and inspiring address and the Stringer Sisters rendered two beautiful duets.

Mr. E. Hattan, a gospel temperance worker from Toronto, assisted the music with the cornet, and also gave a few remarks.

The men present were unanimous in extending an invitation to Evangelist Sharpe to conduct another meeting for men at the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday, August 15th, which he accepted.

In response to our request to the public for a Union Jack a lady friend has kindly donated a new nine foot flag. We are very grateful to the lady for her patriotism and friendly interest in our young men.

Three more of our young men have been accepted by the recruiting officer and several have been turned down since Thursday last.

Stoney Lake Points Had Many Visitors While the Otonabee River and Rice Lake Proved Very Popular---No Accidents to Mar the Enjoyment of Pleasure-seekers.

Only a small number of city drivers remained in the city on Monday, some of whom had to work very late today, those of the good citizens who took chances on enjoying the fine weather with carriage or car, and remained within reach of home and [illegible] for satisfactory picnic cake, and generally celebrated Civic Holiday in a homelike manner. Even the attractions provided to keep thousands of people from the open in the parks, on the river and on the lakes. Despite the fact that almost half the population of the city was off holidaying, not one accident has been reported so far which would in any way mar the pleasures of the day.

For those who wished to leave the city for the day there was an abundance of places to chose from, and excellent accommodation by rail, boat and motor-bike. Stoney Lake and points on the Otonabee and Rice Lake vied with each other in popularity. Hundreds of people attended the regatta at Jumper Island under the auspices of the Stoney Lake Cruisers' Association. A steam boat left the Water street wharf in the morning en route to the regatta and a couple of hundred people were disappointed when they arrived at the wharf and found the boat crowded to capacity. They were not to be left behind, however, and most of them were at the Grand Trunk station in time to board the special train to Lakefield where they proceeded the rest of the way by boat, the Stoney Lake Navigation Company providing two boats for the excursionists who went to Lakefield by rail.

Those who did not wish to spend the whole day at Stoney Lake or perhaps overslept, were enabled to arrive in time for the regatta by leaving the city at 12.20 p.m., when the Grand Trunk Railway Company had another special train running to Lakefield. Passengers were transferred to the steamer Empress at Lakefield and were at the scene early in the evening. The Empress, [illegible] for the evening dance at Jumper Island. Prof. Asa Hawkes' orchestra held forth, and returned to the city at midnight. While there was a heavy rain in the city during the afternoon visitors to Stoney Lake fared better. There was only a light shower about 5 p.m. which was over by the time the dance commenced. The steamer Empress ran a little late in getting to the dock at Peterborough, but was in time for the special train to Jumper Island to connect with it and convey the excursionists to the city. Prizes to the successful competitors in the various events and dance [illegible]

On the waters of the Steamer Rainbow and the Police Barge were operating under the auspices of the Catholic Boys' Protective Association, who journeyed to Young's Point, returning in the evening. There was a little rain during the afternoon, but not enough to spoil the fun. The Rainbow returned to the city at 5 p.m. The steamer Geneva was also busy on the river and many left the city for points on Rice Lake with Captain Harris on this boat. At Tate's Park the Salvation Army people and their friends held forth. The Islanda made trips to and from the city, taking many people to the picnics on the Otonabee.

Outside of the special excursion trains the railways handled the bulk of their trade on Saturday, but many took the opportunity yesterday to make short runs into the country.

In the city the City Baseball League officials put on a good programme at Riverside Park, when a local All Star team won over the St. Paul's of Toronto, the score being 9 to 0.

Germany's Huge Baltic Fleet Driven From Gulf of Riga

Petrograd, August 10.—The German Baltic fleet of nine battleships, twelve cruisers, and a great number of destroyers, sought in vain to enter the Gulf of Riga on Saturday. The attempt was abandoned and the fleet driven back in spite of repeated efforts to break through the Russian naval defences. Russian seaplanes aided the Russian naval boats greatly by dropping bombs on the hostile warships.

A German cruiser and two destroyers are reported to have been damaged by the mines.

An official explanation of the attack of the German fleet on Riga, as given out to-night, follows:

"The Gulf of Riga would allow the Germans to give powerful aid to their army now occupying the western coast of the gulf. With the object of penetrating the Gulf the fleet appeared Sunday off Dirben channel, which is the only practicable way for large ships to enter. The enemy made three attacks with this object of breaking the mine barrier protected by our fleet.

"Our seaplanes and warships co-operated to repel the enemy. The Germans did not succeed in passing our defences. Three of his ships were damaged by mines near Dirben. None of our ships were lost."

RIGA REGION CLEARED OF THE ENEMY

London, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—Although the Russian official communication telling of the repulse of a German naval attack on the Gulf of Riga arrived in London too late for comment by them, all the morning newspapers lay emphasis on what they assert is Russia's improved position in the Riga district. The Russian position throughout the Baltic provinces is described by the newspapers as firm.

"The Russians," says the Morning Post Petrograd correspondent, "are forcing a vigorous aggressive and the Germans have been swept clear from the Riga region."

In a dispatch dealing in a similar manner with the Riga sector, the Times correspondent says:

"The Riga position has been relieved by Russian successes south of the town, and the whole region for 25 miles from Riga has been cleared of the enemy."

DOWNEYVILLE TEACHER WAS HIGHLY HONOURED

It is not often that a teacher gets such flattering recognition as that accorded to Miss Bridget Black, for many years an assistant in the Downeyville R. C. S. S. No. 4. Her services on the occasion of her retirement were specially recognized. At the closing exercises of the school, as reported in the Lindsay Post, not only were trustees, parents and children present in large number to show their regard for a faithful teacher, and to bid her farewell, but His Lordship, Rt. Rev. M. J. O'Brien, D.D., came all the way from Peterborough to lend encouragement to all who had been concerned in the welfare of the progress of school. He was accompanied by Rev. Father Phelan, Rector of the Cathedral, and Reverend Father O'Brien, of the Sacred Heart Parish. Rt. Rev. Mons. Casey, V.G., and Rev. Father Ferguson, Lindsay, were also present.

Miss Black was presented with an [illegible] address, accompanied by gifts of a lady's gold watch and guard and a fifty-dollar purse of gold.

Miss Black was very much affected at these manifestations of good will, and at her request Mr. O'Brien, Separate School Inspector, replied in her behalf, expressing her sincere thanks for the kindness of trustees, parents, and children not only on the present occasion, but throughout the three years since she was first appointed to take charge of the school.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, who was present throughout the afternoon and took a deep interest in the proceedings, spoke approvingly of the splendid educational spirit manifested in the school. Monsignor Casey also added his word of appreciation.

At the conclusion Rev. Father McGuire, parish priest, feeling a just pride in the success of a school to which he had given so much time and thought for the past ten years, briefly thanked His Lordship for the sacrifice he had made in coming such a great distance to be present at the closing exercises of the school, and for the kind and encouraging address he had given to those present, in his usual felicitous manner. He also gave expression to the pleasure it afforded him and the people and children of Downeyville, to have with them Mons. Casey and the other clergymen present, and finally on behalf of the trustee, parents, and children he touchingly expressed the gratitude of all to Miss Black for the earnest and unceasing manner in which she had devoted herself to the children and to the best interests of the school since the day of her appointment, their sincere regrets at having to part with her, and their warm wishes for her future happiness in whatever sphere of life her lot might be cast.

Was Twenty Years Old

Special to The Examiner.

KENTVILLE, Aug. 10. Stating the passing off by farmers of defective and aged horses on a remount department buyer as a "shameful fraud" Sir Chas. Davidson, commissioner, at this morning's session, followed up his reprimand by refusing to vendue their witness fees.

The sales that brought down Sir Charles' denunciation were made to George Porter of Lakeville and P. E. Porter of Waterville. Their evidence followed that of several farmers who confessed that horses they sold were over eight years old. Further evidence of payment by agents of purchase money where no receipts were given, was submitted.

Geo. Porter said the horse he sold to the government buyer for $165 was twenty years old. The animal fractured an ankle eight years ago, but had got over that. Sometimes it lost its wind through choking in its throat.

Patriotic Spirit of This Woman Not Frequently Equalled

The local corps of the Salvation Army quickly contributed their share toward the cost of three ambulances for service with the Canadians at the front. Word was received that $50 would be the donation allotted to Peterborough, to be raised here. On Sunday night Adjt. McElhaney announced that he would reserve the fund solely for the women and when the collection was announced, $67 had been secured. The sacrifice of one woman was most inspiring. Her husband has been ill for years. One son is missing at the front, one is in England with a Canadian battalion and a third recently enlisted. At Sunday night's service she placed a bill in Adjt. McElhaney's hand, stating that she wished she could give more, but was sorry her shoulder purse would not allow it. This woman is of very ordinary means, and yet when Adjt. McElhaney looked at the bill a moment after she had passed he was surprised to find a ten dollar note. It may be out of place to comment, but one is strongly inclined to remark that there are not many women in this country who knows the spirit of patriotic sacrifice like this member of the Salvation Army.

MAY CANCEL THE NEED FOR WIFE'S CONSENT

Ottawa, August 9. It is stated authoritative circles here that the Militia Department is considering the advisability of cancelling the order which made it necessary for every married man to get his wife's consent before enlisting. It is said that many militiamen of extensive experience are unable to join the overseas force because their wives refuse their consent.

LARGE NUMBER ON THE GENEVA

The steamer "Geneva" went out from her two wharfs Monday morning with the jolliest crowd of excursionists that she has carried this season. A spirit of civic sociability characterized everyone, and, as the numbers increased at each wharf, the holiday fraternizing increased.

The sail was much enjoyed all the way to Gore's Landing and Harwood without any interruption from Jupiter Pluvius although the rain clouds seemed threatening all morning.

At Gore's Landing, a party belonging to the Christian Brethren, who were on board, joined in a social picnic in the grove near the lake shore, and enjoyed themselves in their own congenial way until the return of the steamer from Harwood.

The excursionists who continued the sail to Harwood, were delighted with their outing, and spent a pleasant three hours, visiting round the village. The Lakeview House, on the hill, had a jolly musical party from the city, who entertained for an hour or two in front of the verandah, and afforded much pleasure and amusement to the visitors who were attracted to the pretty grove [illegible]

On the home trip, nothing marred the pleasure of the day except several heavy thunder showers which came on about 4 o'clock and delayed the steamer [illegible] The Christian Brethren enlivened the time with hymn-singing and several of the male members took turns in exhorting their hearers to be good. Com.

Among a number of guests registered at the Lakeview House, Harwood, yesterday, were the Scholes brothers of Toronto, champion athletes. After dinner they went out for a spin in their motor car.

The steamer "Geneva" has improvised a number of handy portable tables for the use of private parties and picnickers enjoying the sail down the lake. The tables are drawn up to the railing of the lower deck and can be let down and suspended by chains when in use. Their usefulness was demonstrated yesterday. It was suggested that if the Geneva would run a small water trough round the sides of the boat with spouts to shoot the waterfalls out into the lake instead of on to the decks, Capt. Harris would earn the thanks of his patrons.

Tennessee on Active Service

PHILADELPHIA, aP., Aug. 10. The armoured cruiser Tennessee, with a marine expeditionary force of eight hundred and twenty-eight men and fifty officers on board, sailed from the League Island navy yard shortly after 9 a.m. today bound for Haiti. The warship was loaded for three months' active service.

A Flag Incident on Charlotte Street

A flag incident of rather humorous character broke the monotony of Charlotte street on Saturday evening. Mr. Augustus Schrader wished to celebrate his birthday by a display of flags on his residence, 246 1/2 Charlotte street. The day coming on Sunday he made ready on Saturday. Because in recognition of the amicable relations existing between the United States and this country, he included in his decorations rather a surplus of American flags, the loyal spirit of some person was aroused and a demonstration made against the display. A police officer was an element in the prevention of any serious consequences. The offending flags were removed.

It is a pleasant thing to observe so much patriotism and loyalty displayed in behalf of the flag in some part of the city, however, but there is a chance for the [illegible] that waving for the flag is not all. A case of war hysteria for the flag on first place, and it has been reported that many [illegible] Dominion [illegible] Union Jack at the display of the United States flag are not in order. The Union Jack for the [illegible] would be a much more becoming action and show more loyalty than making demands upon a harmless, inoffensive citizen, a naturalized Canadian with peculiar ideas about the display of flags, but a good-living, honest, hard-working man who has another peculiarity in that he minds his own business and harms nobody.

Letters From Overseas Soldiers.

The following letter from Pte. Harry Watson was received last week by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. H. Watson.

North Caesar Camp,
Folkstone, England.
July 5th, 1915.

Dear Mother and Father,—We arrived in Plymouth on Saturday and had a great voyage across, the ocean being nice and calm. We came here on Sunday morning and are about two miles from Shornciffe, where so many of the Havelock boys are, but I have not seen any of them yet. This is sure some country for cities, and the scenery is beautiful. We are about five miles from Dover and on a clear day can see France and hear the big guns booming. I am sure glad I enlisted. We have been used right and the people here think a lot of the Canadians. There are about 60,000 soldiers around here, including some of the first bunch sent out, so that it will be some time before the 39th get across. We see aeroplanes constantly scouting around here. England is very hilly in this section, all chalk hills. Write and tell me all the news from Havelock. Hoping you are all well. Your loving son, Pte. Harry Watson, 39th Battalion, C.E.F.

Pte. Chambers Writes.

Pte. Wm. Chambers also writes to his parents as follows:

July 11th, 1915.

Dear Mother and Father,—Just a few lines to let you know I am well and hope you are the same. Well mother, we reached England a week ago safe and sound. We are camped at Shornciffe. It is a nice place and one of the largest camps in England. Gilbert Herrington is here now and about 11,000 other Canadians. This is an awful country for hills and from some of them you can see France. We expect to be here about five months and there are 2,000,000 men to go over before we do. I was on guard last night and it is hot work. The post card I am sending you is a picture of the boat we came over on, the "Missanabie." I am feeling fine ever since leaving Canada. The scenery here is beautiful and I wish you could be here. Answer soon and tell me all the news. Your loving son, Pte. W. Chambers, No. 1250, 16 Company, 39th Battalion C.E.F., Army Post Office, London, England.

No Trouble to Keep Skin Free From Hairs

The Modern Beauty

There is no need for any woman to disfigure superfluous hairs, because with a paste made by mixing some powdered delatone with water it is easy to get rid of them. The paste is applied for 2 to 3 minutes, then rubbed off, and the skin washed. This treatment will rid the skin of hair without leaving a blemish, but care should be taken to see that you get real delatone

PRINCE LEOPOLD LAUDS FIGHTING OF RUSSIANS

GENEVA, Aug 6 — I learn from Innsbruck that the battle for Warsaw added a glorious page to Russian military history. Prince Leopold, of Bavaria, said to the Russian colonel made prisoner:

"I express the greatest admiration for your troops which fought with honour and with courage. Neither the numerical superiority of my army nor my numerous batteries could hold these brave soldiers who fell gloriously to the last man."

The Prince made this statement in the presence of the entire staff. Surviving officers of four regiments which were wiped out were allowed to retain their swords. Prisoners were taken one by one, fighting to the last.

DR. CARREL HAS TO WORK UNDER FIRE

PARIS, Aug 9 — The Mayor of Compeign protests officially against the bombardment of the city, declaring it inexplicable in view of the fact it is unfortified and contains no troops or military staff and that it was the centre of important hospitals among which is that directed by Dr. Carrel and maintained by the Rockefeller institute.

FORTRESS OF KOVNO MAY BE EVACUATED

The Dardanelles May Be Forced in a Fortnight's Time

Fortress of Kovno Now Under Heavy Attack May Be Evacuated By Russians

Germans Have Sent Thousands of Shells Crashing Against Three Principal Forts Guarding Kovno From the West --Desperate Heroism of Russians.

PETROGRAD MILITATY CRITICS OPTIMISTIC

Special Cable to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 11.—The fortress of Kovno, now under heavy attack by the Germans, may be evacuated by the Russians before the end of the week, it was admitted in military circles here to-day.

Since midnight on Saturday, the Germans have sent thousands of shells crashing against three principal forts guarding Kovno from the west. They have blown away sections of the Russian works, but the desperate heroism of the Russian army before the fortress has each time hurled back the Teutons when they attempted to charge through the gaps.

The Petrograd military critics while regretting that it may be necessary to retire from Kovno, continued optimistic over the situation all along the Russian front to-day. They declared the Slavs, if forced to leave the fortress, would fall back in good order upon Vilna, resisting stubbornly the enemy's advance toward the Warsaw-Petrograd railway.

NEW COMMANDER AT DARDANELLES.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg has replaced Gen. Leman Von Sanders, as Commander-in-Chief of the Turks at the Dardanelles, according to the Athens correspondent of the Star.

HOW YOUNG AVIATOR WAS KILLED.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Flight Sub-Lieut. Reginald Lord, who was killed in resisting the Zeppelin raid on the east coast early yesterday, was dancing with his fiancee, Miss Violet Beaver, less than an hour before his death.

While the dance was in progress, the telephone flashed word that the Zeppelins were coming and the young aviator hurried to the British air camp. Returning from the raid he made a bad landing in the dark and suffered a fractured skull.

Miss Beaver rushed to the hospital and remained with Lord until he died.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Victims of a Zeppelin raid at midnight included one man, nine women and four children killed. The wounded were also mostly women and children.

A British aviator, Lieut. Lord, was killed in a thrilling air battle which destroyed a Zeppelin.

Lieut. H. V. Hearst,—Son of Ontario's Premier, is one of the Queen's Own Rifles officers going overseas with the 74th Battalion.

THE GERMANS IN BELGIUM VIOLATE LAWS OF WAR

Special to The Examiner

PARIS, Aug. 11.— A report of the Belgian committee investigating violations of international law, issued here to-day by the Belgian Legation, is devoted to instances of alleged violations by the Germans of article 52 of the fourth Hague convention governing the laws and customs of land warfare.

The examples cited cover alleged German attempts, first by offering wages as high as 20 marks (about $5) a day, and finally by force, to compel Belgian civilians to work in arsenals on railways used for military purposes, and in wire factories. The report gives details of alleged violations at Luttre, Malines and Swevedhem and quotes the text of an order declared to have been signed by Lieutenant General Count von Westarf, the German commander at Ghent, dated in that city on June 10, and which is in part as follows:

"The attitude of certain factories which, under the pretext of patriotism, relying on the Hague convention, refused to work for the German army, proves that among the population there is an inclination to raise difficulties for the administration of the German army. In this connection I inform you that I will suppress such manoeuvres by all means in my power."

MEAT PRICES SOAR IN LONDON MARKET

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Great increases in the prices of meat are disclosed in the report of the superintendent of the London Central Market, issued tonight. WHAT IS BRITAIN DOING?

We sometimes hear it asked, "But what is Britain doing" Here, says the Chicago Daily News, are some of the things Britain is doing:

"1. Holding the seas for the ships of her Allies as well as for her own.

"2. Protecting the coasts of her Allies as well as her own.

"3. Struggling in co-operation with the French, to smash the Turks and win the Balkans for the Allied cause.

"4. Rendering great aid to French and Belgian troops in resisting the terrible onslaughts of Germans on the Allied left wing in the West.

"5. Making loans and supplying munitions to nearly all her partners in the war.

"6. Pursuing a financial policy in Southeastern Europe likely to promote the cause of the nationalities.

"7. Putting into the field more than ten times as many men as she ever promised.

"8. Guarding her own soil and people against an invasion, which, if it came—and it is believed to be far from impossible—doubtless would be the most savage, the most unsparing, ever known. With how many men? Well, with enough. To hear some people talk, one would suppose that upon Britain were laid the duty of defending every land but her own."

Special Cable to The Examiner

MILAN, (via Paris), Aug. 11.—A despatch from Bucharest to the Corziere Della Sera says that following the day when Prince von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, the German Ambassador to Turkey, left the Roumanian capital a representative of the Krupp gun works arrived at Bucharest and offered to the Roumanian government thirty-six batteries of artillery, with ammunition and 2,000,000 pounds of barbed wire, to let ammunition destined for Turkey pass through. "Reports from the front in Poland say the Russian announcement that farm crops were devastated and the Russians left a desert behind them is greatly exaggerated. The farmers disobeyed orders to destroy their crops and a full harvest of rye, wheat and oats is being brought in with the assistance of German soldiers. Only the villages were burned."

Two More Ships Attacked By Submarines

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug 11 — Two more ships, the small Russian bark Baltzer and the British steamer Rosalie, have been attacked by German submarines in the last 24 hours. The Baltzer was sunk, her captain and crew reaching land. The Rosalie, in a sinking condition, was beached.

BRITAIN NOT TOLD OF PEACE PROPOSALS

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug 11 — The British government has received no official report of Germany's rumoured peace proposal to Russia.

Official circles neither affirm nor deny the report, holding that if true the proposal was in such tentative form that it would not be incumbent on Russia formally to communicate it to the Allies.

ANY OLD BOTTLES

Any rags. Any old iron. Any old rope. Any old bottles to-day? Such was the cry of the dealer as he knocked at the door.

The man of the house himself opened the door. "No go away" quoth the hen-chokers greatly. "There is nothing for you. My wife's away."

The itinerant merchant hesitated a moment and then enquired. "Any old bottles?"

NOT THE BIGGEST
BUT THERE'S NONE BETTER

The size of an institution doesn't necessarily determine the quality of its product or service.

The biggest doesn't always produce the best.

It all depends upon the quality of the materials used, the skill and interest of the workman, and the intentions of "the man behind."

We frankly admit that ours is not the largest Optical Establishment in Ontario.

But we do maintain that, with our thoroughly modern equipped shop, and with well paid workmen personally interested in its welfare, and working under the supervision of Mr. Fowler, we get better results at less cost to the customer from our parlors than do the larger shops.

Guaranteed quality, better prices and all round better service—that is what you are assured at Fowler's Optical Parlors.

PEACE OFFER IS NEWS TO DENMARK

Examiner Special.

COPENHAGEN, (via London), Aug. 11 — Persons in close touch with court circles here declare they know nothing regarding the peace offer alleged to have been made by the German Emperor to the Emperor of Russia through the King of Denmark. The reported proposal was said to have involved the trade of a part of Poland for Galicia.

How to Beautify a Summer Soiled Face

[illegible] simple matter to remove a [illegible] and pimple while [illegible] mixture of [illegible] was used like cold cream, was massaged the worst old complexion into one of snowy whiteness and velvety softness. It literally peels off the worn out particles of outside skin, in so gentle and gradual a manner that there is no discomfort. The skin is not rubbed off but in particles so fine as to be invisible, leaving no evidence of the treatment. The younger, healthier under-skin, forming the new complexion, is one of captivating freshness and beauty. One ounce of mercolized wax, to be had at any druggists, is enough to remove any ordinary pimpled, tanned, freckled or sallow skin of moderate [illegible]

Many skin troubles can be cured very quickly by the use of mercolized wax. An excellent wrinkle remover, because it tightens the skin and strengthens relaxed muscles. A wash lotion made as follows [illegible] is highly recommended for [illegible] which leaves [illegible] clear.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"It's about time," sez he.

"Oh, it's only you," sez I. "What's gone wrong?"

"Some of our saddle stock is missin'," sez he, and for the first time it occurred to me that I had seen some of our hosses in Big Jeff's outfit. As plain as a barn one of our brands brushed right in front of me on that last rush when Panther's crowd had charged over us, thinkin' that the two they saw ridin' in from the south were big reinforcements. That brand had struck me square in the eyes, but it never got into my mind until Jim Spoke cross.

While I was marvelin' about this, Jim went on: "This place has all gone to pieces lately. You came in yesterday with your scare talk about a big raid, and that's all Flames thinks about now. He had the two youngest Hagus boys out scouting this mornin' and delayed us half an hour then Red and Shorty got the notion that the hosses had gone north and they talked so much about it while we were ridin' south, that I sent 'em north, and told 'em if they couldn't some back with news, never to make any report at all."

"Did you find the hosses?" sez I.

"No," sez he, "we did not, and then Baldy Hagus came and said you sent him after his sons to go to Cooper's, so they started to Cooper's and he went on to Elliot. It looks to me as though you were workin' more for others than for me."

"Well, I have been lately," sez I. "Still, your stuff is in purt' nigh as good shape as it was when I struck you first, and most of the time you've got even a better outfit, while I'm suspicious that you are more like a real boss this very minute than anybody on earth ever thought you would be, and so you weaken your hand when you complain audible about not bein' able to handle your own men.

"I've been on the go purty steady lately, but it's about over now, and even as it has been, I've kept my eye on your stuff as I rode past. I can tell you right now what became o' your hosses, and I can also tell you that part of your outfit are after 'em, and if they're worth it, they'll be brought back to ya. You've been long-sufferin', Jim, but when I start in to work again, you won't have to teach me my trade over, that's one comfort."

He refused to ask me any questions after this, but I loosened up and told him that Big Jeff and Panther had had his hosses in their bunch, but that old Josiah was hot after them, and Phil McLaughlin, and all of Bradin's crowd.

"Humph," sez Jim, "mebbe Red and Shorty were right, after all."

"It's just possible," sez I. "They've been in this business a long time and the longer you're in it the more information you pick up without knowin' exactly where you get it from. You never will get far enough from a book to hear your own instinct, but Shorty 'll never get far enough from his instinct to care two bits for all the book-knowledge ever was printed. Slim Jones is in the bunk-shack if you want to hear what he has to say."

"What are you goin' to do?" sez he, with all the bite gone from his tongue.

"I got one more night's work ahead of me, Jim," sez I, "and after that I reckon I'll feel sort o' lonesome, and if I start in to workin' lonesomeness out of my system, I'll sure show you what ranchin' is like."

I went up to tell the Hagus boys to let Dan's critters stray if they wanted to, and for them to keep a good watch of the house, but they had pulled out, and so I decided to ride after 'em. Mollie Cooper was my idy of a regular woman, and if Panther was still in the neighbourhood, I didn't intend to take an chances.

I decided to take Hellion with me for the run, and to ride Starlight. Starlight was one of Crusader's colts and I had gentled him careful. Nothin' in those parts could touch him, but he hadn't been rode lately, and if se be I was to turn him over to either Kate or Tom Smith, I wanted the edge took off if him first, and sixteen miles would just about do this. He was full of play, and as I was indulgent with him, it look me some little time to say my rope on him to suit me.

I fastened him to the corral and went in after Hellion. The dog was rejoiced at the chance of a ride, but when I brought him outside, instead of friskin' he glanced over towards where Tom Smith had been sheltered, and the hair rose on his back, which was as far as he went when his own folks were close to him, so I put Hellion back into the box stall, and hustled up into the low mow.

Panther Emmons was on my mind, and what I supposed was, that he had hid in that thicket expectin' to carry out his own plan durin' the night. After seein' him in that scrap, I knew he wasn' yaller. I had a good view from the window, and I was some took back to see two men in different places, and I finally made out one to be the tall deputy from Paris.

It was plain enough they knew of Tom Smith's hidin' place as his hoss, saddle, and blankets wer still there, and they were waitin' for him to get back. I got on Starlight and whistled careless while he was prancin' up to the house. Leavin' him at the door, I hurried inside where I found Tom Smith tryin' to comfort his mother, who was enjoyin' a little cry.

"Tom Smith," sez I, "this is no time for breakin' news gentle. That thicket you were hidin' in is surrounded, and one of the posse is the tall deputy. The best hoss in these parts is at the door and you're welcome to him, but they've probably got spies out, and I doubt if you could get away.

"There's an unfinished cellar under this part of the house, and that looks the best bet to me. The trap door was made for stairs and it's flush with the south wall. By puttin' the soty on the fur now coverin' it, you'd stand a chance even if they searched. Well?"

"The cellar," sez he.

"They've seen me on the hoss," sez I, "and so I'll have to go on over to Cooper's, but I'll be back as soon as possible and do what I can."

Then the Begum helped me to straighten things up, and she was as steady as you'd ask for. That's a curious feature about women, they'll rawhide the life out of ya over little things, but once they discard their politeness, why the sky's the limit, and you can depend on 'em just that far.

I rode light and careless but I felt as if I was ridin' through a crowd all the way. It was somewhere about five in the evenin' when I reached the stage road, and I stopped in the timber and squinted around a little before crossin' it.

The road ran straight to Baldy Hagus's place, and I could see Mandy Hagus comin' up from there with little Toodles Cooper, who stopped and played with everything he passed. The road to the north made a curve just above Cooper's, and so I couldn't see far in that direction. The' was nothin' threatenin' in sight, and I was just about to cross the road when I saw a man steal out from behind the mule stable and make for the house. He crouched low and kept glancin' around. It was Panther Emmons.

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO.

Little Sunshine.

It flashed across me what Bud Stern had said down there in the canon about Panther Emmons havin' a way to fix Jim and also a way to get even with Dan Cooper at the same time, and right then I began to feel rage-waves warmin' up in me, and I cut Tom Smith out o' my thoughts and prepared to help the angels look after Mollie Cooper.

Mollie Cooper was too healthy and hearty and clean-minded to think evil of any one so long as she could catch a glimpse o' blue sky above their heads, and she didn't seem to understand what fear meant nor what on earth it was for, which was foolishness on her part as Dan had told her time and again.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can. — "I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend your medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and think they are fine. I will never be without the medicine in the house."—Mrs. FRANK EMSLEY, 903 Columbia Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Other Case.

Beatrice, Neb.—"Just after my marriage my left side began to pain me and the pain got so severe at times that I suffered terribly with it. I visited three doctors and each one wanted to operate on me but I would not consent to an operation. I heard of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing for others and I used several bottles of it with the result that I haven't been bothered with my side since then. I am in good health and I have two little girls."—Mrs. R. B. CHILD, Beatrice, Neb.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Cardinal's Enemy

A Bit of History That Is Also a Romance.

By F. A. MITCHEL

If one were asked what period in history furnished the most themes for stories he might be right in replying that containing the administration of the government of Louis XIII. of France by Cardinal Richelieu. Louis' queen, Anne of Austria, was a bitter opponent of the cardinal, and what Richelieu was to the king the Duchess of Chevreuse was to the queen. The duchess was one of the most beautiful, the most attractive and the most intriguing women who ever lived.

After the exposure of a treasonable plot the cardinal banished her to Lorraine, where she infatuated the king, Louis XIII., mixing him up in another conspiracy. The cardinal's policy forbade him to imprison a woman, so after banishment from France had failed he sent Mme. Chevreuse to a country estate she owned. There, having no better subject for her fascination, she bewitched an octogenarian official.

This amusement failing to satisfy her, she turned her attention to another intrigue with a view to overthrowing the queen's and her own detested enemy, Richelieu.

At this time the queen was secretly corresponding with those opposing the cardinal, among them Mme. de Chevreuse. The person who conducted this correspondence was one La Porte, her secretary. He was the keeper of her cipher code, translated her letters into it, forwarded them to their destination and received the replies, handling them in the same way.

But the cardinal was watching and suspected the frequent goings and comings of the man. One of the queen's supposed adherents was won over and told La Porte that he was going to Tours, where Mme. de Chevreuse was held in restriction, and asked if he had any message for her. If so he would carry it. La Porte replied that he had a letter and would bring it to him. While doing so he was arrested with the queen's letter on his person and lodged in the Bastille. The letter was not important, but the queen and her friend had been forbidden to correspond. The cardinal at once ordered the seizure of the private papers of both the queen and the duchess.

When the queen was accused of treason she falsely made an oath that she had not corresponded with any foreign power. Richelieu knew better, and on promise of the king's pardon the queen confessed that she had written her relatives in Madrid and in Brussels, but not on matters of state. La Porte declared that he had carried no letters for the queen except to Mme. de Chevreuse. Fearing that La Porte's statement and hers would not agree, Anne desired to post him on what she had declared and ask him to make the same statement. This she hoped would satisfy Richelieu and prevent his investigating further.

But how reach La Porte in his cell at the Bastille? So carefully watched was he that a warden quitted him only for a few hours during the day and slept in his cell at night. One of the queen's maids of honor and devoted to her, Mlle. de Hautfort, not only suggested a plan of conveying a letter to La Porte, but volunteered to carry it herself.

The Chevalier de Jars, who had been involved in a former conspiracy against the cardinal, was confined in the Bastille and occupied a cell directly over that of La Porte, though between the chevalier's and La Porte's cell were two others. It was hoped by the queen's adherents that De Jars might find some way of conveying a letter from the queen to La Porte. De Jars had suffered a paralytic stroke and was allowed the privileges of an invalid, being permitted to receive friends and converse with them in the courtyard of the prison.

Mlle. de Hautfort early one morning issued from the palace of the Louvre before the inmates were awake, being dressed in the costume of a maidservant. Mademoiselle's hair, which was luxuriant and beautiful, was concealed under a large coif, and she was robed in a loose gown which concealed her superb figure. Calling a fiacre, she was driven to the Bastille, where she asked to see the Chevalier de Jars, saying that she was a lady's maid of a niece of the chevalier and bore a message for him.

The hour was before the prisoners' time of rising, and the queen's maid of honor was obliged to wait in the guardroom among a lot of soldiers of low degree. After some time the chevalier arrived and asked what was wanted. Mademoiselle drew him into the court and, raising her coif, showed him who she was and handed him the queen's letter with her majesty's request that he find means to convey it to La Porte.

De Jars was no coward, as he had demonstrated in the schemes in which he had embarked to overthrow the cardinal. Nevertheless he hesitated to become mixed up in a scheme which if discovered would cost him his head. But when mademoiselle reminded him of the terrible risk she was herself running he consented.

The queen's messenger returned to the palace without having been discovered. De Jars, who was full of resource, worked out the problem of getting the queen's letter to La Porte. Had the latter occupied a cell directly beneath his own he might contrive to get the letter through the floor. But to pass it through other floors was impossible. The next cell below the chevalier's was occupied by some men who had been implicated in an insurrection in Bordeaux. The next cell below theirs held the Baron de Tenace and a man named Reveilton, who had been a servant of a nobleman who had lost his head for a conspiracy against the cardinal. The chevalier planned to pass the queen's letter through these two cells to that of La Porte.

De Jars enlisted in his service a young fellow named Bois d'Arcy, the valet of a prisoner who was confined with his master. D'Arcy while in attendance on his master at the hour of exercise found a broken stone with a sharp point, which by eluding the observation of the sentinel he managed to slip in his pocket and at the same time asked the aid of the Bordeaux prisoners. Any prisoner was ready to do anything for another unfortunate, and they at once granted the request. Then they were given the broken stone for an implement.

The men succeeded in boring a hole through the floor to the cell next below and passed the letter through to Baron de Tenace and Reveilton. These made another hole in the floor of their own cell and had not La Porte been so closely watched would have had no difficulty in passing the missive on to him. They learned that the warden usually left La Porte for a few minutes in the morning. Waiting till they heard him go out, they passed down the letter.

The goal was won. La Porte made his confession fully with that of Anne of Austria, and the cardinal for once was outwitted. Being convinced that he had got the truth and the whole truth, he advised the king to pardon his wife, whom Richelieu believed to have been led into mischief by Mme de Chevreuse. The pardon was granted on condition that the queen would hold no further correspondence with the mischief maker.

Anne, whose conscience was very elastic, regarded this promise solely as pertaining to letters. Through Mlle. de Hautfort she had contrived to inform the duchess that if their machinations against the cardinal were going well she would receive a prayer book bound in green. If there was danger it would be bound in red and she must look out for herself. Through some misunderstanding Mme. de Chevreuse one day received a prayer book bound in red. She decided upon flight.

An official whom she had enthralled provided her with directions for proceeding to Spain, and thither she directed her course. Ordering her carriage, she gave out that she intended to visit friends in the neighborhood. She set out near evening and as soon as it was dark ordered her coachman to stop and stepped out disguised as a man in a long cloak and riding boots. A horse was waiting for her, and mounting, followed by two servants also mounted, she rode southward.

In her excitement she had left in the carriage the official's directions as to the route and was obliged to proceed without them. Riding all night, she arrived at a town near which a nobleman, La Rochefoucauld, was at the time stopping. He had carried messages between her and the queen, and she knew she could trust him; but, not willing to compromise him, she wrote him as a stranger who had killed a man in a duel and was flying from the authorities, begging him to send a carriage and a valet.

La Rochefoucauld sent the carriage and the valet, and the duchess set out for another of his houses occupied by a gentleman in his service named Malbasty, where she arrived before daylight the next morning. Mme. Malbasty recognized the valet as a servant of La Rochefoucauld, and the man told her that the gentleman he was conducting was an intimate friend of his master and related the story about the duel. M. Malbasty asked the duchess how he could serve her. She replied that she would tell him tomorrow and asked him to go with her, since the two men she had brought from town might be recognized, and she wished to leave them behind until she should send for them.

Malbasty consented, the carriage was sent back, and, mounting a horse which was provided for her, the duchess proceeded on the journey, accompanied by her host and the valet. She had bandaged her head to conceal a wound that she said she had received in the duel.

The hairbreadth escapes from recognition that were made by the fair fugitive were many. She was constantly meeting persons who knew her and was obliged to resort to various devices to avoid acknowledging her identity. One man she met said that if she were dressed as a woman he would certainly mistake her for the Duchess de Chevreuse. She replied that she was a relative of the duchess.

Despite the fact that as soon as her flight was discovered the cardinal sent after her in great haste, she reached Spain, where she was safe.

Philip IV., brother of Anne of Austria, was then king of Spain, and as soon as he learned that his sister's adherent was within his dominions he ordered that she be received with great distinction and sent several royal carriages, each drawn by six horses and occupied by his representatives, to fetch her to the capital. On her arrival the people turned out en masse to see the distinguished stranger who had come to them after so many romantic adventures. The king, like all other men, was captivated with her, and the queen showed her every attention.

From Spain the duchess went to England, whose queen, Henriette Maria, was a sister of the king of France and a bitter enemy of the cardinal who dominated her brother. There she received no less a welcome than in Spain.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elizabeth Thomas.

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orizex capsules. Take one after each meal and before going to bed. Watch yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this concentrated remedy, be sure to get the genuine oil of orizex in capsule form (in original sealed packages with [illegible] on it), or a [illegible] will be sent on receipt of 40c. by Wm. SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S.

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr John W. Naas, Lunenburg, N.S., "five years ago three boxes of Dr Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

Prince's Narrow Escape.

Princess Arthur of Connaught is being congratulated on her husband's daring escape from the Germans, whose prisoner he was for an hour or more.

The prince and his chauffeur drove their machine into the German lines in a fog. They were seized and thrown into a hut. Here they discovered German uniforms and disguised themselves. They managed to pass the sentry placed to guard them and enter their own automobile again. On nearing the German lines they were challenged, and to escape ran at a speed of ninety miles an hour. Many bullets struck the flying car.

Past the Germans outposts they sped, but the French seized them, and thinking them Germans, were on the point of shooting them as spies, when they were identified.

The Perfect Letter-Writer.

Here is a capital specimen of Babu letter-writing to be found in Mr E. V. Lucas' anthology, "The Gentlest Art":

"Honorable Sir,—Kindly excuse this poor thy servant from attending on your Honor's office this day, as I am suffering from the well-known disease commonly called ache of the interior economy, and I shall ever pray.—Yours [illegible] painful, Ram Chunder. P.S.—Oh, death, where is thy sting?"

Spinach Is Wholesome.

Among the green vegetables spinach is invaluable, and once a day is not too often to have it. It contains natural elements which are most wholesome to the system. To satisfy the craving for acid a little vinegar may be poured over the vegetable. Spinach is palatable served hot or cold, and for this reason is suitable for luncheon or dinner.

FAIR ISLAND.

Scene of a Romance and a Tragedy of the Spanish Armada.

Fair Island, twenty-five miles south of all the other Shetlands, has had a strange enough pageantry passing over its rocky surface. For not only was it the home of the Picts, and then of the Norse, and for the Norse the signal beacon to give warning of the coming of the hostile sail. Besides that, it supplied a chapter in the romance of the Spanish armada.

For here was wrecked the ship of Don Gomez de Medina, and that noble and his men were for a time most generously entertained by the islanders. But time passed, the Spaniards stayed, the meal and the mutton diminished. Then the islanders, wrapped in by the wild storms, unable to get to any other island and fearful of famine, bid their friends [illegible] grow weak, many died of starvation, and some, it is said, were pushed over the tall cliffs into the sea.

At last one Andrew Umphrey took the Spaniards away in a ship, and since that day the name of Umphrey has been powerful in the Shetlands.

The Fair Island people show plain traces of Spanish blood, but they resent the suspicion of it, saying that the Spaniards were isolated when on the island.

It is hard to conceive how isolation could well be possible on an island two miles square. Besides, the Fair Island people do not deny that the strange patterns and the lichen dyeing of the stockings and caps and shawls their women knit were taught them by the Spaniard, and indeed the same sort of handicraft is found to this day in country places of Spain.

The Fair Islanders were great smugglers in the old days, and they are still good bargainers. They are very intelligent, seeming to know instinctively how to read, and not so very long ago they would follow the mail steamers in their light canoe-shaped boats, which none but themselves can manage, begging for newspapers and books.

One of their terrors is of infectious disease. Another is of the dog tax man, against whose coming they are said to hang and drown their dogs. Another is of emigration, for they love Fair Isle. Yet emigrate they must. About forty-five years ago a hundred of them went, unable longer to coax a living from their bare rock. Their greatest joy is the occasional visits of the minister, more frequently now than in the old days, when he arrived but once in about two years to marry and christen. His preaches every day of his stay, and they prolong his visit on every possible pretext, using, when all else fails, the solemn prophecy of a storm.

True Stoicism.

It was sentence day in the city court. A man in the prisoners' pen who had been sentenced to two years for larceny began to cry softly. The big man next to him, who was going to serve seven years for highway, said:

"Aw, wotcher sniffin' about?"

"I'm—I'm—th-th-thinkin' about leavin' [sob] my—my—family—leavin' my wife"—

"Aw, cut it out! Look at me. I ain't cryin', am I? An' I'm leavin' two of 'em."

How He Looked to Her.

Stella—What does her husband look like?

Bella—Like he had shopped for him by phone.

A Reproach.

"So Miss Banger played for you? She claims that she can make the piano speak."

"Well, I'll bet if it spoke it would say, 'Woman, you have played me false.'"—New York Press.

POPULAR "GERMAN POSTCARD"—Picture is of a postcard common in Germany showing the Lusitania. Germans delight in keeping before them the horrible results of their dastardly means of warfare.

PEERS OF ENGLAND DOING THEIR SHARE IN THE GREAT CRISIS BEFORE THE EMPIRE

LONDON, Aug. 10—The war has levelled all classes in England from duke to commoner. Never before has the democratic idea so permeated England.

It is now a little more than twelve months ago that Lloyd George was jibbetting at the peers for the futility of their existence and as the most unproductive class in the community.

Now the views of the Minister of Munitions, like those of all other prominent commoners in Parliament, have received a check, for never have the noble houses of England more completely justified their ability to hold their traditions.

France and Flanders, Africa and the Dardanelles have levied an extremely heavy toll on the peer and heirs of peers.

But it is not only in the field that the lords have won fame. On the domestic they have not been found wanting.

Peer Works at Manual Labour.

For instance, a peer has divested himself of his high title and is working in a munition factory at 7d (14 cents) an hour. Other lords are directing great ammunition and armament works, railroad transport and great shipping companies, while a baronet and at least one peer—the Earl of Cranford—have enlisted as privates.

The number of men of aristocratic birth, who have served, or are serving, in the trenches, will probably never be known. But some idea of the service which the House of Peers is rendering the State may be gained by the fact that already in this war five peers and thirty-one heirs to peerage have been slain. This number does not include Prince Maurice of Battenberg, brother of the Queen of Spain, who was mortally wounded in France last October.

In the South African war only four peers and six heirs of peers lost their lives and this over a period of two and a half years.

King's Equerry Killed.

The Prince of Wales was among the foremost to set the nobles an example. Other members of the royal family serving in France include the Duke of Teck, brother of Queen Mary, and Prince Arthur of Connaught, while yet others closely allied to the royal house are attached to the Headquarters staff. It was learned only recently that Lord Crichton, the King's equerry, who was supposed to be a prisoner in Germany, had been killed at the front some months before.

Peers Who Have Fallen.

The list of peers who have laid down their lives in their country's cause or been incapacitated in its actions is a lengthy one.

The sons of Viscount Hardinge and Lord St. David have been killed in action, while the heir of Lord Ribblesdale was wounded last month in the Dardanelles.

Lord Grenfell's twin sons, Captain Riversdale Grenfell, V. C., the great polo-ist, and Captain Francis Grenfell, were both killed in France within a few months of each other.

A great fighting name is recalled by the death last November of Captain Lord Richard Wellesley, son of the Duke of Wellington.

Lord John Hamilton, brother of the Duke of Abercorn, was killed in action two months earlier. The Duke of Roxburghe, who served with great gallantry in South Africa, was wounded in action last October.

A famous Irish peerage, the Earldom of Dartry (Dawson), is likely to become extinct through the death in action last November of Captain R. L. Dawson, Coldstream Guards. He was the only male member of the family of his generation.

Captain the Hon. R. B. Bruce, eldest son of Lord Balfour of Burleigh, who had been reported missing, was subsequently found to have died of wounds.

Lieutenant the Earl of Dalhousie was among those wounded at the same time.

Major Viscount Dalrymple, M. P., Scots Guards, son of the Earl of Stair, was reported missing, and then it transpired that he had been wounded and taken prisoner.

Among the wounded in the recent list from the front was Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Cavendish, brother of the Duke of Devonshire, who among deaths officially reported are Lieutenant Lord Spencer Douglas-Compton (son of the late Marquis of Northampton and heir to the present Marquis) and Hon. Keith Stewart, second son of the Earl of Galloway. Lieutenant the Hon. W. E. Rodney, Royal Flying Corps, brother of Barton Rodney, is another of those officially announced as killed in France.

Titled Officers Wounded.

Among the officers wounded in the earlier fighting was Major Lord Esme Gordon-Lennox, a son of the Duke of Richmond. Hon. H. Baring, brother of Lord Revelstoke, was wounded last November, while the eldest son and heir of Lord Valentia, M. P., the Hon. Arthur Annesley, was killed in action.

There are three sons of the present Lord Tennyson in the King's service. The eldest was wounded last November. Baron de Forest, during the earlier stages of the war had offered himself for active service and had been accepted. The Duke of Marlborough holds the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. Colonel Lord Lovat, temporary rank of Brigadier-General, and Lord Basil Blackwood, brother of the Marquis of Dufferin, temporary rank of Second Lieutenant.

Norbury Makes Munitions.

The list gives some idea of the valiant efforts which the gentlemen of England are making and have made on behalf of their country. On the other side of the picture there is the example of Lord Norbury, a peer, who, though fifty-three years of age, a month ago began work in the fitting-shop of an aeroplane works at Byfleet, Surrey, and every day is wearing brown dungarees and a cap. He is paid sevenpence an hour and sleeps in a small bedroom in a tiny lodge adjacent to the works, which is tenanted by a butler. He takes his meals with the other workmen and puts in fifty-four hours weekly. He works on a lathe and the verdict of his bench mates is encouraging. "No'ling," they familiarly call him, and they treat him quite as an ordinary workman. Sometimes he works overtime.

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition the less soap you use the better.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), you can get from any druggist, is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water, and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drugstore. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

BEST SUPPORTS

A. P., Main, Carleton Co., Ont.

THE question of what is the best support for sweet peas deserves some thought. Supports that are good, cheap and effective, and that will ensure economy in labor, will appeal to most of us. The oldest method of all, the use of branches, is almost obsolete. The best substitute is wire netting five to six feet high. It is cheap, durable, and can be stored away easily.

Where wire netting is used no permanent fixture is essential. The netting, when necessary, can be cleared away easily and free access to the ground be secured for fall preparation. As the peas climb strands of binder twine can be run up and down the row to keep them to the netting.

The young should be not only encouraged to save out of their small allowances or earnings, but they should also be taught how and when to spend.

HOW SOLDIERS LIVE AND FIGHT IN THE TRENCHES.

LONDON, Aug. 10—When it rains the trenches are half filled with water. The cold is always of the damp, penetrating, dreadful kind that chills to the very marrow. Hot food is served three times a day to the men in the trenches by other soldiers, who scurry like rabbits through long uncovered tunnels running back from the works concealing the guns.

These men in the trenches must have good food in order that they can have good blood, and if they have good blood, they have good courage, they keep warm because their circulation is good and their extremities are warm from exercise. Many men are invalided, however, because their blood and their stomach were not right to withstand the awful hardships of this winter campaign.

When you do not properly digest your food your blood becomes thin and every organ of the body soon feels the effect. The result is—headaches, sleeplessness, nervousness and many other symptoms—due to accumulation of poisons in the body. Unless the stomach is given aid at this stage—more serious illnesses follow. Now is the time to help your weakened stomach—now is the time to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery (in tablet or liquid form). It has the same power to set you right as it has been proved to have in thousands of other cases. It will help your stomach so that the food you eat will nourish and sustain you and make good reviving blood. It will enable you to get rid of the waste a sluggish liver and irregular bowels have permitted to accumulate in your system.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is composed of known native healing remedial roots and herbs with no alcohol nor narcotic drugs to give you harmful habits. It can now be obtained in tablet or liquid form from dealers, or send 50 stamps for box of tablets.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada, at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ontario.

Flint Filled Butter.

Butter that was sold to the English working classes of the fifties was adulterated with ground flint. The flint stones were ground and manipulated into a substance called "soluble silica." This dissolved in water formed a stiff jelly, which was mixed with the butter, fresh salt and coloring matter being added. The compound resembled a very good looking dairy made butter.

OUR RIGHTS.

Our rights extend just to the place where others' rights begin and not an inch further. It is well to study the boundary lines closely. The man who "stands upon his rights" is not always a pleasant or well poised figure; he often has one foot upon his neighbor's ground.

STRONG FAITH

GOD is our refuge and strength therefore we will not fear; though the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea. Ps. 46: 1-2.

In the early days of emigration to the West, a traveller once came for the first time in his life to the banks of the mighty Mississippi. There was no bridge. He must cross. It was early winter and the surface of the great river was sheeted with gleaming ice. He knew nothing of its thickness, however, and feared to trust himself on it. He hesitated long, but night was coming on and he must reach the other shore. At length with many fears and infinite caution, he crept out on hands and knees, thinking thus to distribute his weight as much as possible.

When the traveller had gone in this way painfully about half way over, he heard a sound of singing behind him. There in the dusk was a colored man driving a four-horse load of coal across upon the ice and singing as he went.

So with many of us to-day. Some accept God's promises with great hesitation, while others with stronger faith, step out fearlessly.

Alexander von Humboldt was once travelling in South America when there came a sudden stillness of the air which seemed like a hush over all nature. This was quickly followed by a fearful convulsion of the earth, and Humboldt tells us that the convulsion in his own soul was as great as that in the world around him. All his old views of the safety of the earth were destroyed in a moment. Houses were crumbling around him. Trees were being overthrown. Should he fly to the hills for refuge? The mountains were reeling like drunken men. Should he fly to the sea? He turned, and looked, and lo! it had fled. Ships which a few moments before had been floating serenely on its surface, were now rocking on the sands.

At this moment he happened to look up and he observed that the heavens were calm and unshaken. Then there flashed through his mind the words of the Psalmist: "God is our refuge and strength, therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea."

KIDNEY DISEASE WAS KILLING HIM

Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives" The Great Kidney Remedy

HAGARSVILLE, Ont., Aug. 26th, 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. Having seen 'Fruit-a-tives' advertised, I decided to try them. Their action was mild, and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever."

How to Darn Big Holes.

When darning socks run a thread around each hole before beginning and draw until the edges lie flat. That makes the hole appear smaller and it will also be much easier to mend.

When stockings have quite a hole in knee or heel, baste on wrong side of them a patch of netting the color of stocking. Then proceed to darn on right side; it saves cotton, also makes a better finish.

To put the tops of old stockings to good use, draw them over sealed fruit jar to keep the fruit from light. Light darkens the color of the preserved fruit. A label could be pinned to each stocking cover.

Thin People Can Increase Weight

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy flesh, stay there, a fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying: First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol one tablet with every meal for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again; it isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their story, and most any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all, the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it forms the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now, develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. Druggists sell it in large boxes, forty tablets to a package on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S GATHERED SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

The gathered skirt is certainly the novelty of the present season, and it is so simple to make, apparently, that many women will attempt it without a pattern to guide them, and they are likely to make a serious mistake if they do. The matter of proportion is important, and this is to be had only with a good model at hand.

In the design which we illustrate herewith we have a gathered skirt with a gathered yoke. The yoke is made with the raised waistline and the lower portion of the skirt is gathered where it is attached to the plain edge of the yoke. Bordered materials and embroidered flouncing are liked for these skirts, but they are equally effective when made of plain fabrics if handled cleverly.

Wash silks show to advantage in these gathered skirts, and numbers of the prettiest taffetas are also made in this manner. Bands of laces or embroidery, medallions and other devices are used as trimmings, and in some cases we have a piping or a contrasting color.

The skirt pattern, No. 7,270, is cut in sizes 22 to 32 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 4¾ yards of 30 inch bordered material.

Violent Onslaughts By Crown Prince's Army

Kaiser Postponed Entry Into the Polish Capital

GERMANS EXPEND HALF A MILLION SHELLS IN ATTEMPT TO ADVANCE

Violent Onslaughts by the Crown Prince's Army Were Repulsed---Whole Country is Swept Clear By the Terrific Pounding of the German Artillery---French Maintain Positions.

ATTACKS AROUND SOUCHEZ REPULSED

Special Cable to The Examiner

PARIS, Aug. 11.—(French Official Communique)—Half a million shells have been hurled against the French works east of Vienne Le Chateau in the last three days in the violent onslaughts by the Crown Prince's army, aiming at the railway leading eastward to Verdun.

The once heavily wooded slopes of the valleys around La Haraz and Have have been swept clean by the terrific pounding of the German artillery.

The northern stretches of the forest of Batis is a field of tree-stumps and fallen timbers.

This afternoon's official communique reported that the German bombardment was "very violent" yesterday and last night, but that the French maintain their positions at this point and elsewhere in the Argonne.

A lively cannonade proceeded around Souchez during the night. The Germans made one of their nightly bomb attacks but were repulsed.

TRIUMPHAL ENTRY WAS POSTPONED.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 11.—Fear that Russian spies would attempt his life delayed the triumphal entry of the Kaiser into Warsaw, it was learned from reliable sources here to-day.

The Emperor planned to enter the Polish capital with his victorious troops upon the heels of the Russians. But rumours reached the German secret service that all the public places in Warsaw had been mined and agents of the Czar left behind in the Polish capital with order to slay the Kaiser.

Consequently arrangements for his immediate entry into the capital were cancelled.

For the same reason American and other neutral correspondents in Berlin, who were to have been permitted to enter Warsaw on the day following its evacuation, were forced to delay their visit.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—An answer to Germany's latest Frye note was sent Tuesday night, it was learned to-day.

It was understood it has accepted damages, without waiving the American claim that the sinking of the Frye was unwarranted, a proposition the administration was said to have agreed to arbitrate.

A reply to Austria's complaint against the shipment of American munitions to the Allies was expected to go Thursday night.

FORTRESS WILL BE EVACUATED.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 11.—All Government institutions in Kovno are being removed to Bobrinsk. Despatches this afternoon indicated an early evacuation of the fortress and retirement toward Vilna.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The 4,279 ton British steamer Oakwood and the Norwegian bark Morna, were added to the list of German submarine victims to-day, making a total of four vessels reported sunk since last night.

RUMANIA MOBILIZES THREE CLASSES OF RESERVES

The Rome Tribuna's Salonica correspondent wires that 100,000 fresh German troops immense artillery are concentrated on the Serbian border determined to open a road to Turkey through Servia and Bulgaria to succor the Turks.

MILAN, Aug. 11.—Rumania has called to the colours three more classes of reserves than those called out in the Balkan campaign of 1913.

A Cettinge correspondent says Serbia awaits the word from Russia before resuming active operations against the Austrians.

The fall of Gorizia may be the signal for a new combined campaign by Italy, Serbia, Montenegro and Russia.

A despatch from Athens says the King of Greece received Venizelos for two hours yesterday. The ex-Premier refused afterward to discuss the interview except to say the King asked him to visit him again within three days.

A despatch from Bucharest says that following the departure of Prince von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, the German Ambassador to Turkey, from the Kumanian capital, a representative of the Krupp gun works arrived at Bucharest and offered the Rumanian Government thirty-six batteries of artillery with ammunition and 2,000,000 pounds of barbed wire to let ammunition destined for Turkey pass through.

Following the intervention of the British Minister at Bucharest, it is said, the offer was refused.

Red Cross Society Organized in the South End

A meeting composed of representatives of the various evangelical churches of the South End was held yesterday in St. James' Church, for the purpose of organizing a branch of the Red Cross Society.

Judge Hoycke gave an interesting and instructive address and appealed to the wives, mothers and sweethearts to encourage enlisting. The meeting was also addressed by Adjt. McElhiney, Mrs. Allan and others, after which the election of officers took place.

Through the kindness of Mr Pennefather the Society was offered the use of a room in the Union Bank opposite the C. G. E., in which to hold their meetings.

The Auxiliary of the Red Cross Society will meet every Wednesday afternoon from 2 to 5, and a hearty invitation is extended to all the ladies in the south end to come and help in this good work.

BUMPER CROP IN THE WEST

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 11.—Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, who has just returned from the west said today that the western wheat crop would yield at least one million bushels more than the best year known heretofore.

"This estimate was given me by a number of prominent grain men in the west," explained Mr. Rogers. "The weather has been fine and the crop exceptionally good."

If Mr Rogers' forecast is correct, the wheat yield will be considerably over two hundred and ten million bushels.

ANTI-AMERICAN FEELING

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—To-day found the War and Navy Departments rushing preparations for threatened actual fighting. Violent anti-American feeling was reported at Vera Cruz. It was questioned whether help could reach there in time to save foreigners from violence.

Carranza's agency in Washington gave out what was virtually an ultimatum of warning. Secretary Lansing and Latin American diplomats to cease meddling in Mexico.

PATRIOTIC LEAGUE MEETING TO-NIGHT

Important Question to Be Considered—Capt. Ackerman in London on Saturday—Other News

A meeting of all the committees of the Speakers' Patriotic League will be held in the recruiting quarters at the corner of George and Brock Streets, the former Commercial Hotel), at 8 o'clock to-night. It is very important that all the members attend this meeting. The question of a battalion for Peterborough is expected to be reported on, and it is desired that all the members be present.

At the Armouries to-day it was reported that the present number of infantry recruits is forty-seven, of which several are bandsmen. They are not drilling with the others, hence the number undergoing instructions is forty-four.

Sergt. Hart has been deserted by the other sergeants who were in the city last week, and is busy with the new men. Wm Leyburn, who enlisted a week or so ago, has been assisting him in the preliminary work. Private Leyburn was a sergeant in a territorial regiment in the Old Country. He is a thoroughly capable St. John Ambulance Association worker, and with Andrew Forrest, who went home six weeks ago to make munitions, tried to arouse local citizens to an interest in this ambulance work.

Private Arthur Noble, who has returned from the front, remarked to a friend that "the need of men and more men" is more than a rhetorical expression.

It was learned to-day that Capt Chas Ackerman will likely be home within the next two weeks or so. On Saturday a cable was received that he had arrived in London, from France, and expected to be sent to Bramley in Kent. At the Armouries it was regarded as pleasing intelligence that he was thus able to make the trip, and was apparently on the road to recovery sufficient to enable him to return home. It was stated that practically all the news regarding his condition was received from hospital at-

WIFE SEEKS A DIVORCE FROM A CANADIAN OFFICER

Officer is on the Firing Line While His Wife Seeks a Permanent Separation

HAS WRITTEN AUTHORITIES

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—Among nine applications for divorce made since the last session of Parliament and which will be dealt with by the divorce committee of the Senate next session is one by the wife of a Canadian officer now in Flanders. Application is made on the usual grounds.

The officer has written the authorities here asking that the petition be not heard until the war is over, and he adds that "in all probability there will be no necessity then for going on with the case."

When he wrote he was about to go into the trenches.

A Patriotic Band Concert

King Edward park had the largest crowd of the season last evening, when the massed bands, 57th Regiment and Salvation Army, gave a band concert.

All the recruits in the city lined up at the armouries, and headed by the massed bands, playing patriotic airs, marched down George street to the park, where a patriotic band concert was given. During the evening there were addresses by His Honour Judge Huycke and Adjutant McElhiney, calling upon the young men of the city who could do so to enlist and everyone to do what they could to help.

SOLDIER ILL WIFE DEAD

Mrs. T. Levoir Passes Away While Her Husband is in Europe Serving His King and Country

IN RED CROSS HOSPITAL

There will be a sad home coming for at least one of Peterborough's representatives in Europe, should he be fortunate enough to return to his family. While Corp. Thomas Levoir of the 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, was lying ill in the Red Cross Hospital, Torquay, suffering from physical disability, his wife passed away in Montreal, where she went with her five small children to visit with her mother. The sad death of Mrs. Levoir occurred on Aug. 3.

Mrs. Levoir was 37 years of age. She had been ailing for some time, but when the call came for men for the First Contingent she bade her husband good-bye and let him go to do his share for his King and country. Her five children remained at home with their mother, and they resided at 179 Edinburgh street. Mrs. Levoir's health kept gradually failing, and about two weeks ago her mother, Mrs. William Grady, came from Montreal to pay her a visit. A brother of Mrs. Levoir enlisted in Montreal during his mother's absence in Peterborough and Mrs. Grady decided that she must at once return to her home to see him before he left for Europe. But the condition of her daughter, Mrs. Levoir was such that she could not be left alone, so it was decided that with the children they should both go to Montreal. However, it was not thought by any of the friends of Mrs. Levoir that her condition was so very serious and it was a great shock to them to learn of her death on August 3.

The Levoir family has done its share in the present crisis. There were three brothers residing in the city when war was declared and they all enlisted with the First Contingent. Pte. Robert Levoir, 699 Harvey street, was invalided home from Salisbury Plain and was the first Peterborough man to receive a pension from the Canadian government in connection with the present war.

Pte. William Levoir, also 699 Harvey street, is at present recovering from wounds at the Lady Forester Hospital, Broseley, Shropshire. He was admitted there on June 21.

The five children of Corp. Thomas Levoir, the eldest of whom is 15 years of age, are at present in Montreal with their grandmother, Mrs William Grady. They, with their father, will have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

Wrist Watch For Pte. Alf. Veenman

The employees of the Colonial Weaving Co. to-day forwarded a wrist watch to Private Alf. Veenman, 599 Patterson street, who went to Barriefield yesterday with the detachment of Peterborough recruits for the 8th C. M. R.

Mr Veenman enlisted on Friday, and with Monday a holiday the employees did not have time to secure a remembrance.

STATIONED IN WOOD WHERE BIG BATTLE WAS FOUGHT

Pte. Victor Northcott in Interesting Letter to His Mother Tells of Exciting Experience

3000 BURIED IN WOOD

Mrs R. M. Northcott, 177 Murray street, has received the following letter from her son, Pte. Victor Northcott, with the second battalion, first Canadian contingent, in France.

France, July 24.

My Dear Parents and All:—Well, we are now in another part of the same line, only further down, than when I wrote you last time. We are in a nice wood, with lots of mosquittoes, wasps etc. I had a nice wasp sting in the palm of my left hand last night and I sure knew it. Only a short time ago the Germans were in this wood. There are about three thousand men buried here. There was some awful fighting done to take it, too. We will be able to get lots of berries here in about three weeks' time. I had a couple of handsful of strawberries yesterday and there are lots of blackberry brambles around. There are also lots of apples, pears and other eats. Where once were nice little gardens is now parts of the battlefield, and the houses as once were, are no more use except for building barricades and filling sand bags. There is a fine stone cross that the non-commissioned officers of the 4th battalion of Canadians put there in memory of a company Sgt.-Major, whose name was Galloway. He was shot while caught on the barb wire entanglements, just in front of where we are now. He was a Toronto man I think. They must have respected him a lot. The cross cost them 15 pounds. It is within ten minutes walk of the German trenches.

I had a nice experience on guard last night. I was standing on the grass by some bushes and a few bullets came whizzing by me within a few feet of me. I moved back behind a tree and found myself down in a nice muddy ditch and also in a rat nest. You should have seen the rats running in all directions. It was so dark I couldn't find the path.

Well I guess I'll ring off. Love to all.

VICTOR.

Driver Lindsey Writes.

Driver J. D. Lindsey with the Canadian expeditionary force, now in France, writing to his mother, Mrs Clara Crouter, 179 Shrubrooke street under date of July 24th, says:

"Just a line to let you know that I am well, hoping that this will find you the same. I had a letter from Ephraim yesterday. He wants me to go to England to see him. If I can get a pass I think I will. How are you getting along now? I hope you are in the best of health.

I wish you would send me a nice cake. Have it well baked and put it in a tin box and send it to me. We had the guts in the first line of trenches, and we all went up to pull them out and the shells were howling past us, and the bullets were flying all around us. But did we care? No, not one of us. We pulled them out one by one by hand and then carried the shells out about 12 miles on our shoulder. Then two nights after we had to go back in the first line of trenches again, and there was not one to say no. They are all brawny men. This is all this time. Your loving son,

J. D. LINDSEY.

HIT BY SHRAPNEL FRAGMENTS

Wearing the scars of war, Private Arthur Noble, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Noble of this city, is visiting his parents for a few days before proceeding west to his home in Prince Rupert. In the charge at Festubert he was hit in several places with pieces of shrapnel, losing his right eye, and receiving a gash on one hand. Private Noble was in one of the hottest corners in which the Canadians participated, the charge from the orchard at Festubert as it was referred to in the despatches, and he certainly witnessed thrilling action, but when seen by a reporter he was as uncommunicative and silent as a censor.

He was with the first British Columbians, and states that their billets behind Festubert were close to the Peterborough men. The town was about the size of Peterborough, and the two billets were at opposite ends of the town, illustrated locally by the positions of the Auburn Mills and St. Peter's Cemetery. As the men were not permitted to leave their respective quarters, Private Noble did not have the opportunity of seeing the Peterborough soldiers. It was in the Festubert action that Capt. Charles Ackerman was seriously wounded.

From his experience, Private Noble emphasizes the value of machine guns, especially in defending a position. It was the custom in trench life to sleep when possible during the day time, although the enemy might be shelling at the time. After dark detachments were sent back to secure food, to bring up ammunition, and others repaired trenches when necessary. But of the details of the work especially under fire, Private Noble had nothing for publication, and apparently he had no desire to talk about it.

He has met a number of old friends and received their congratulations upon having done his bit even at the loss of one eye. He left the reporter for an engagement with a specialist to obtain an artificial eye. Except for this injury he is looking well, and returns to his business in Prince Rupert with the satisfaction of having done his bit.

Mr. G. H. Duncan Appointed Chairman

At a meeting of the Board of Health which was held yesterday afternoon Dr. C. H. Amys, Chairman of the Board, tendered his resignation, which was accepted. Dr. Amys deemed it undesirable to retain the Chairmanship of the Board and at the same time, hold the position of Medical Officer of Health for the city, which position he assumed after Capt. A. W. McPherson, M.D., left for overseas service.

On motion of Mr. Morty and Dr. Amys, Mr. G. H. Duncan was appointed Chairman.

Will Extend Sewer

The Board recommended the construction of a piece of sewer on Robinson Street from Rogers Street to the Grand Trunk tracks.

Mr. Fleming, 993 Water Street, wrote the Board regarding the construction of a sewer to the above-mentioned address. The Board will recommend that the sewer be extended to 993 Water Street.

Sanitary Inspector Spence reported the completion of the sewer on Jackson Avenue, and also stated that the residents on the street were ready and willing to make the necessary connections.

Granted Leave of Absence.

Miss Bertha Mowry, superintendent of the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital, was granted leave of absence so as to enable her to take a position as nurse-sister with the army medical corps.

Dr Amys asked for authority to open the Isolation Hospital for diseases other than diphtheria and scarlet fever, such as spinal meningitis. The matter was left in the hands of Dr. Amys with power to act.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE SURE.

In the result of the Manitoba elections, one may see the dawn of a new day for woman's political rights. In these elections, of course, only men voted; and that they should pronounce so strongly in favour of a chief plank in the Norris Government platform, shows that the men recognize the right of women to a voice in the government of the country. Women's claim to equal suffrage rights with men, and their fitness to discharge the public duty of voting, were further emphasized by the part a woman played in the campaign. Mrs. Nellie McClung, the noted Canadian writer, by the way, the author of "Sowing Seeds in Danny," took the platform in favour of the party that triumphed, and her stirring speeches are to be credited for a great part of the achievement of the triumph. It is probable that before long women will be given the franchise in Manitoba. One of the ministers of the Norris Government declares that the Government will at once proceed to carry out its programme of policy; and as woman suffrage is one of the prominent planks of their platform, we may expect that the favoured women of this favoured province will have the right of the ballot placed in their hands at an early date.

NEED OF COORDINATION.

It is no disparagement of our local educational legislators and administrators, the Board of Education, to mention a circumstance, in which, in the language of the street "the laugh was on them." This spring the Horticultural Society, which has charge of Central Park, gave the School Board permission to remove some of the park trees where they were growing too closely together, and replant them on McDonel street north of the Collegiate Institute grounds. The trees were planted there and said to be doing well, but lo, when the city tree trimmers came to "do" this street these promising young trees were cut down and destroyed.

This circumstance, if correctly reported to The Examiner, is not mentioned for the sake of the "laugh on the School Board," but as an illustration of a condition that exercises a great adverse influence upon the interests of the public. It demonstrates the lack of coordination of the activities of the several authorities that hold sway in the city; and a lack of harmony of policy, and lack of coordination of action, which defeat the very objects mutually aimed at.

In this instance there was no unity or accord of aim and action between the city authorities and the authorities of the Board of Education in a matter in which the public benefit was, or should have been, the first consideration. Nor was there even coordination between the different departments or activities of the civic authorities. The city turned two men loose to work their will with saw and axe upon the city street trees. They seemed to be responsible to no authority, but were evidently permitted to do the important and expert work of tree trimming without instruction, or restraint, or control of any kind.

The Horticultural Society empowered by the City Council, turned over some street trees to the Board of Education to be planted on the street; to do the work of the City Council. Then along comes a gang of tree-trimmers delegated, or at least paid, by the city, and destroyed the work, which had been done by the combined cooperation of the city, the society, and the schol board. In other words, the city itself destroyed the work which it had indirectly done itself.

This is the result of the lack of cooperation and coordination of effort, the lack of definite plan, and of the effective mobilization of the city forces which should properly working in harmony; work to the achievement of the same end instead of working at cross purposes with themselves, and with every other authority that has responsibility for public operations or improvements.

We see this illustrated not only in the case of the park trees, but in various forms of street work. On a certain street earlier in the season, one gang of street workers graded, at considerable expense, a street to provide surface drainage. This was no sooner done than another gang of street workers came on and deposited several loads of gravel so as to form a dam and destroy the work and defeat the object of the gang that proceeded it—to provide for the off-flow of surface water. Then along came another gang, and at considerable expense put in catch basins to remove the water that could not get away on account of the dam placed by a preceding street gang. The catch basin gang left its work, presumably completed, but in such a condition that there was no course made so that the water could reach the catch basin. Then another gang came along to make an opening so that the surface water could get to the catch basin. In this process the silt and mud were removed from the gutter and—a wonder of thoughtfulness—this mud was used to fill in a trench that was cut across the street to unite the catch basins, which trench had been so badly filled that it left a deep hollow, providing a bump for wheels, and is now a continuous mudhole in wet weather across the street. With all this the water cannot yet reach the catch basin on one side of the street, and in the late rains the water had to accumulate so as to overflow the street surface five or six feet before it rose high enough to flow into the catch basin.

Here we had four or five different street gangs at work upon a street "improvement," spending money liberally, and each defeating the object of the other, and ending by not doing what was the object of the first endeavour. There seems to be a lack of proper planning; then a lack of proper supervision and a policy or practice of sending out separate gangs of street workers, left to their own devices, or with but hazy instructions, each one undoing the work of the other. There is, it seems, no instruction given as to what is aimed at, and no effective supervision of the separate, and detached, and aimless succession of operations.

This example of working at cross purposes on the streets as well as the similar example of the park trees and the school board, is only a type of what is, and has been going on for years all over the city in connection with various affairs in which the public interests are involved.

There is needed only rudimentary knowledge, only limited experience, to prove the value of system, and the wisdom of coordination of effort. The war staffs of the fighting allies, are not working at cross purposes. They have a definite plan of campaign, understood by all, and all are working together, coordinating to give it effect, with the least conflict of effort or defeat of the common object.

In city affairs where so many departments are working in their own way—the various departments and sub-departments of the city complicated by numerous companies and corporations having their "go" at the streets, with the different boards and societies responsible for public operations there is in this case, a multiplicity of distinct and individual aims and objects to be coordinated. This should be done so that each one of the many will not be working against the other, but all harmoniously working together to secure the common aim without the waste of public money involved, and in scores of cases, without the object aimed at being reached.

SIR "J. A. M." AIKINS.

The Manitoba Free Press thus plays upon the initial letters of the name of Sir J. A. M. Aikins, the defeated and discredited leader of the Aikins-Rogers party in Manitoba:

"Gazing sadly at the election results, Mr. Joseph Bernier, sombre as Poe's Raven, to say nothing of a more recent and smaller bird which has been heard from of late in this vicinity, may well shake his head sadly, and exclaim: 'Jamais! Jamais! Jamaikins! Nevermore! Nevermore!'"

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN SOLDIERS.

THE SUBMARINE.

As an instrument of terror the submarine is a tremendous success. As a means of destroying an enemy's commerce it has so far proved a total failure. The difference between the German and English figures of vessels destroyed may be due to the reclusion of trawlers by the Germans and their exclusion by the English. If all the trawlers were swept from the seas it would have no appreciable effect upon British resources.—Philadelphia Record.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER'S VOICE FOR LIBERTY AGAINST ABSOLUTISM

[illegible] Sir Wilfrid Laurier's unselfish devotion throughout forty years of public life to the great principles of justice toleration and liberty; typical of Canada's unswerving devotion to the Empire and to the principles that make the Empire a force and civilizing influence. Through dark days of defeat and bright days of triumph, make Imperial expansion a blessing to every part of the Empire and a guiding example to all nations. With the impressive eloquence that has made him a vital force in broadening the Imperial outlook and establishing Canada's place in Imperial development, he impressed on his hearers the momentous truth that the cause to which he has devoted his life is at stake in the great conflict.

It is not only in the firing line that the cause of justice, toleration, and liberty inspires to heroic self-sacrifice. Courage is demanded in time of peace, when more insidious enemies would frustrate the public will and sacrifice the public interests by crafty subterfuge and open attack. The courage that has never failed the Liberal Chieftain in victory or in defeat gives double force to his words when urging every Canadian to and able to share in the honour of upholding a noble cause. That eloquent voice will reach beyond the great audience to his fellow-citizens of the Province of Quebec, who must feel a redoubled inspiration through the union of Britain and France in the onward march of liberty. Misrepresentations and deceptions have been attempted in Quebec to discourage or dissuade [illegible] No more [illegible] Laurier's voice [illegible] Canada [illegible] Every man knows the [illegible] of a southern [illegible] aggressive neighbor. It is [illegible] to come out [illegible] and the moral conviction of effective action rests on it. It was timed and impressed with the [illegible] paramount influence in Canada's national development.

No voice could more impressively declare the duties devolving on the people of Quebec, the duty to defend the rights of smaller nations, the duty to fight for all that the British flag under which their rights and liberties are guaranteed, stands for, and the privilege of helping to defend the land of their ancestors, old France. In this Sir Wilfrid speaks not as well as to his native Province. In the clash of nations petty attempts to make him appear as too British to his compatriots and not sufficiently British to the people of other Provinces shrink to insignificance. The great leader is appreciated at his true worth, and the people whose spirit finds expression in his words are recognized as fellow-workers in the highest cause of national advancement. One of war's compensations is the strengthening of the bonds of fellowship and brotherhood among those enlisted together in a common cause. When that cause is noble, and elevated, the bonds of brotherhood are elevated. Sir Wilfrid has shown himself equal to this great occasion, softening racial criticisms, smoothing away racial differences and inspiring all to do their part in carrying to victory the flag that typifies all that is high and noble in national life.

BARBED WIRE FORESTS

Mean Certain Death Without High Explosives in Modern War

In the Russo-Japanese and Balkan Wars barbed wire played a big part, although it was heavy to carry about. But the stuff has attained its full and frightful significance in the present upheaval. It is often electrified, as at Liege, where the heroic General Leman passed a current of 1,500 volts through his maze of strands—a perfect net of shock and electrocution which distant gunners sprayed with shrapnel till the trap was a shambles from which the stoutest-hearted turned away. All manner of devices are now employed to deal with barbed wire. Pliers and cutters are not much use; 80 per cent. of the volunteers for this work never come back. Hooked javelins are thrown, with cables at the end, enabling the assailants to drag the wire away—a real "tug o' war." Rockets, too, are used, with lines attached for hauling. But high-explosive shell is, after all, the best means of tearing wire away where it exists along a wide front, and is deep and high—a forest of death which defies all valour, by reason of the hurricane of fire behind it, and the impossibility of tearing it down by hand and passing through.

Bees Fought British

In the bush fighting in East Africa the Germans and their black troops placed hives of bees, partially stupefied by smoke, under lids on each side of narrow tracks along which our troops must advance. Wires or cords lifted the lids when touched by the advancing troops, and swarms of infuriated bees, recovered from their temporary stupor, were let loose on the attackers. The failure of the attack at certain points is said to have been due as much to this onslaught of the "little people" as to the German rifles and machine guns, many men being so horribly stung on the face or hands as to be temporarily blinded or rendered incapable of holding their weapons. Over 100 stings are said to have been extracted from one of the men of the Loyal North Lancashires.

Divine Sarah Loyal

It is remarkable, but perfectly true, that Madame Sarah Bernhardt has never appeared in Berlin. Why, she has just explained. "I saw," she says, "the Germans operating in 1870-71 and shall never forget their atrocities. I never would go to Germany. I was offered fabulous prices to go to Berlin, but I always refused."

STONEY LAKE BREEZES

We Stoney Lakers are firm believers in signs, particularly those of the weather. When it is fair our memories are given a holiday, but when it is un-fair we suddenly brush up our recollections. For example, for the last few days, Mrs. Pussy's favorite cat, "Kaiser," has been sitting with his tail to the fire and industriously washing his face; Mrs. Auburntop's hair has been curling into kinks; Mr. Towser's dog has been digging holes and burying bones; Mr. Corn's chilblanes have been more troublesome than usual; Mr. Hennessy's chickens have been warbling late and early, fish have been seen near the surface and smoke has been beating down to the ground.

Result A downpour of rain for several days. Farmers may wear a doleful face, and summer resort keepers may look in vain for a surplus but there is one man who wears the "smile that won't come off" the management of the Trent Valley Canal Every inch of rainfall makes it so much easier for him to make a record for water conservation.

Even at this late date the water in Stoney Lake is only thirty-one inches below high water mark, which is, approximately two feet higher than usual

Germany Far From Kaiser's Aim of World Domination At End of Year of War

Her Commerce Gone, Her Colonies Seized and Her Flag No Longer Seen on the Ocean, With All Civilization United Against Her, She Now Faces Ruin

LONDON, Aug. 11—Despite Germany's thirty years of preparation for this terrific struggle and her utter disregard for the laws of God and man; her violations of the neutrality of Belgium and Luxemburg in her invasion of France; her murders from the sky; her bombardments of undefended coast towns, her employment of asphyxiating gases, and her policy of piracy against unarmed enemy and neutral vessels—culminating in the horror of the ages, the sinking without warning of the great Cunard line steamship Lusitania and the murder of hundreds of harmless men and helpless women and children who were passengers; despite her foul play and fiendish practices, Germany at the end of the first year of the war, which has cost the lives of 4,000,000 men and resulted in the maiming of double that number, finds herself further from the Kaiser's dream of world domination than ever, and the fruits of her ambition have turned to ashes on her lips.

Notwithstanding her temporary successes and they are only temporary —in the Eastern theatre of war, millions of homes in Germany are in mourning, other millions will be added before the great war, for which the Kaiser above all men is responsible, will be ended.

Germany's commerce with the outer world, owing to the command of the sea by the allied fleets, is nil and her business men, robbed first to fill the war chest of the War Lord, are facing ruin. The great thrust at Warsaw, designed to inspire hope of victory, is really meant to rob them of more money under the guise of subscriptions to another war loan, which will leave the Empire facing, if not really in, bankruptcy.

Germany's colonies are disappearing. First it was Kiao-Chau, taken by Germany from China by trick and theft, and now in the hands of the subtle Japanese. Then followed German Southwest Africa, conquered by the redoubtable Boer turned Britisher, General Louis Botha, and added to the possessions of the British Empire, and all signs indicate that every vestige of territory which she has annexed in lands beyond her borders will be lost.

NO GERMAN FLAG ON THE SEA.

The German flag is no longer seen upon the sea. Her great fleet of commercial vessels have been either captured, are idle at home or are interned in neutral lands. Her great war fleet, too, is locked in behind the Bight of Helgoland, and her only triumphs by sea are those achieved by her submarines in attacks on unarmed passenger steamships or fishing smacks.

Whenever and wherever the British and German navies have met, gun for gun, as in the battle off the Falkland Islands, the British have won, and so at the close of a year of warfare the ships of the German navy, outside of those in sanctuary at Kiel, have been swept from the seas, and Britannia rules the waves!

Because of this British domination of the sea Germany, through its agents and propagandists in America, has sought by appealing to sectional interests—the cotton growers of the South, for instance—to embroil the United States with England; but these plots have been abortive, and pro-German strikes in the munition works of New England have failed and the Kaiser and his government stand convicted by the jury of American public opinion as murderers, and this verdict is indorsed by every neutral nation in the world.

While Germany has suffered tremendous losses and stands as an outlaw among the nations, the forces that are fighting for the freedom of the world have been compelled to make appalling sacrifices of men and money, the expenditures running well into billions.

Russia, which has borne the brunt of the tremendous struggle with the war mad Kaiser and his armed hosts, has contributed hundreds of thousands of lives and treasure untold.

France, believing in German promises of peace and therefore unprepared for the gigantic conflict with the world's greatest military machine, has performed prodigies of valor, and though she has achieved no other victory to compare with the glorious battle of the Marne, her great General Joffre, the first French commander-in-chief to realize that orderly retirement makes for final victory, continues to do nine-tenths of the fighting in the western theatre of the war and holds the Kaiser's forces with their demoniac methods in peremptory, permanent check until the hour strikes for the great allied advance.

ENGLAND WOULD FIGHT FOR YEARS.

England, which entered the war with Lord Kitchener calling for 100,000 men, a call which has been answered thirtyfold—there are 3,000,000 Britishers in khaki to-day—at last realizes that this is a life and death struggle, and just as the Kaiser's troops, after months of terrific fighting, are exhausting their ultimate strength in the effort to crush Russia, at this precise moment England, which fought through a thirty years' war once and is willing to do this again if it be necessary, is beginning to move in deadly earnest.

I do not know whether the censor will permit me to say it, but I know that during the last two months England has been forwarding splendidly equipped armies to "somewhere in France" and to somewhere else, where they will be able to give a splendid account of themselves in the war for liberty, a war which Mr. Asquith says will continue until the spectre of German military oppression is laid forever; a war which King George says will be fought until the forces of liberty triumph.

So, summing the situation up at the end of the first twelve months of conflict, it appears that at the cost of her national honour Germany has been able to overrun Belgium and has penetrated beyond the borders of France; she has been able to check, for a time, the march of the Great Bear on Berlin; she has lured the Turk—her only acceptable act—to his destruction, and she has brought the House of Hapsburg and the Dual Monarchy into the valley of the shadow of death.

These are the whole of Germany's achievements during the first year of the great war for which she has been preparing for more than three decades.

On the other hand, Germany has united civilization against her. The world will never forget the Lusitania horror. Though America may not declare war to avenge the outrage, the stain of the crime will be worn by and the punishment of ostracism therefor will be the lot of the descendants of the criminals for many generations.

While it may be freely confessed that the Russians are being terribly punished by the Germans for the moment, it must not be forgotten that France and England are stonger and better able to fight the conscienceless foe than they were a year ago. It is heartening to remember, too, that while the credit of these two great nations is at the highest, both at home and abroad, and money is theirs for the asking, no one wants German bonds. Neutral investors will not trust the honour of a nation that regards sacred covenants and treaties as "scraps of paper."

The outlook, therefore, at the end of the first year of the war is that Germany and her puppet for that is what once proud Austria-Hungary has come to be—will be thoroughly beaten even if, as King George says, it takes ten years to accomplish the task. France, England and Russia have undertaken this work, and they will not stop until military Deutschland is "unter" instead of "ueber" alles. Italy has joined the forces of liberty, and the achievements of her army have been superb. Others will follow Italy and align themselves on the side of the right, and if the prophecies of the greatest men in the nations of the Quadruple Entente are fulfilled, the war will end in victory for the forces of freedom.

Belgium will be rehabilitated, France will come into her own again, and the Germany of the military despot, of the "Junkers," now a pariah among the nations, will disappear to give place to another Germany, representative of the genius and democracy of that land—a Germany like unto that which Americans believed the Fatherland to be before the "Mad Dog of Europe" made the name German a byword in the mouths and a stench in the nostrils of men.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

Louvain and District, Part II.

The massacre of civilians at Louvain was not confined to its citizens. Large crowds of people were brought into Louvain from the surrounding districts, not only from Aerschot and Gelrode as mentioned in former articles, but also from other places. For example, a witness describes how many women and children were taken in carts to Louvain, and there placed in a stable. Of the hundreds of people thus taken from the various villages and brought to Louvain as prisoners, some were massacred there, others were forced to march along with citizens of Louvain through various places, some being ultimately sent on the 29th to the Belgian lines at Malines, others were taken in trucks to Cologne as described below, others were released. On account of the massacre of some of these unfortunate civilian prisoners given by two witnesses may be quoted.

"We were placed in Station St., Louvain, and the German soldiers fired upon us. I saw the corpses of some women in the street. I fell down, and a woman who had been shot fell on the top of me. I did not dare to look at the dead bodies in the street, there were so many of them. All of them had been shot by the German soldiers. One woman whom I saw lying dead in the street was a Miss [illegible]—about 35. I also saw the body of A. M. [illegible] (a woman). She had been shot. I saw an officer pull her corpse underneath a waggon."

Another witness, who was taken from Aerschot, also describes the occurrence. "I was afterwards taken with a large number of other civilians and placed in the church at Louvain. Then we were taken to Station St., Louvain. There were about 1,500 civilians of both sexes, and we had been marched from Aerschot to Louvain. When we were in Station St. I felt that something was about to happen, and I tried to shelter in a doorway. The German soldiers then fired a mitrailleuse (a breach loading gun formed of many barrels fitted together, and capable of being fired simultaneously) and then rifles upon the people, and the people fell on all sides. Two men next to me were killed. Afterwards saw someone give a signal and the firing ceased. I then ran away with a married woman named E. whose maiden name was V. M. [illegible], aged 29, who belonged to Aerschot, but we were again captured. She was shot by the side of me, and I saw her fall. Several other people were shot at the same time. I again ran away, and in my flight saw children falling out of their mother's arms. I cannot say whether they were shot, or whether they fell from their mother's arms in the great panic which ensued. I, however, saw children bleeding."

Journey to Cologne.

The greater number of prisoners from Louvain, however, were assembled at the station and taken by trains to Cologne. Several witnesses describe their sufferings and the ill-treatment they received on the journey. One of the first trains started in the afternoon. It consisted of cattle trucks, about 100 being in each truck. It took three days to get to Cologne. The prisoners had nothing to eat except a few biscuits each, and they were not allowed to get out for water and none was given. On a wagon the words, "Civilians who shot at soldiers at Louvain" were written. Some were marched through Cologne afterwards for the people to see. Ropes were put around the necks of some and they were told they would be hanged. An order then came that they were to be shot instead of hanged. A firing squad was appointed, and five or six prisoners were put up, but were not shot. After being kept a week at Cologne some of the prisoners were taken back this time only 30 or 40 in a truck, and allowed to go free on arriving at Limberg. Several witnesses who were taken in other trains to Cologne describe their experiences in detail. Some of the trucks were abominably filthy. Prisoners were not allowed to leave to obey the calls of nature; one man who quitted the truck for the purpose was killed by a bayonet. Describing what happened to another body of prisoners, a witness say they were made to cross Station St., where the houses were burning, and taken to the station, placed in horse trucks crowded together, men, women and children, in each waggon. They were kept at the station during the night and the following day left for Cologne. For two days and a half they were kept without food, and then they received a loaf of bread among ten persons, and some water. The prisoners were afterwards taken back to Belgium. They were, in all, eight days in the train, crowded and almost without food. Two of the men went mad. The women and children were separated from the men at Brussels. The men were taken to a suburb and then to the villages of Herent, Valvorde, and Sempst, and afterwards set at liberty. This taking of the inhabitants, including some of the influential citizens, in groups and marching them to various places, and in particular the sending of them to Malines and the despatch of great numbers to Cologne, must evidently have been done under the direction of higher military authorities. The ill-treatment of the prisoners was under the eyes and often to the direction of officers and soldiers themselves took part in it.

The object of taking many hundreds of prisoners to Cologne and back in to Belgium is at first sight difficult to understand. Possibly it is to be regarded as part of the policy of punishment for Belgian resistance and general terrorization of the inhabitants, possibly as a means to show these people to the population of a German city and thus to confirm the belief that the Belgians had shot at their troops.

Whatever may have been the case when the latter began on the evening of the 25th it appears clear that the subsequent destruction and outrages were done with a set purpose. It was not until the 26th that the Library and other University buildings, the church of St. Peter and many houses were set on fire. It is to be noticed that cases occur in the depositions in which humane acts by individual officers and soldiers are mentioned, or in which others are said to have expressed regret at the [illegible] orders.

WORTHLESS NAGS, OLD, CRIPPLED

KENTVILLE, N.S., Aug. 10.—Styling the passing off by farmers of defective and aged horses on a remount department buyer as shameful fraud, Sir Chas. Davidson, commissioner, at this morning's session followed up his reprimand by refusing to vendors their witness fees.

The sales that brought down Sir Charles' denunciation were made by George Porter of Lakeville and P. E. Potter of Waterville.

Their evidence followed that of several other farmers who confessed that the horses they sold were over eight years old. Further evidence of the payment by agents of purchase money where no receipts were given, was submitted.

Aged 20, Broken Ankle.

Geo. Porter said the horse he sold to the Government buyer for $165 was twenty years old. The animal fractured an ankle eight years ago, but had got over that. Sometimes its wind bothered it and it had a choking in the throat. These were old troubles, however.

To Sir Charles Davidson the witness said he did not tell the veterinary of the horse's age or defects.

"Did you know that horse was to be used for military purposes?" asked Sir Charles. "Yes," replied the witness.

Sir Charles then remarked: "You should be ashamed of yourself. To initiate a fraud on a public officer of this kind, knowing the use to which the horse was to be put, is shameful. You will get no fees."

Porter said the horse was all right for military purposes.

Russell Morton, a farmer, said he knew the Porter horse. It had the heaves badly.

Old and Had Bad Leg.

H. E. Porter got $160 in cash for the horse, which was eleven years old. Its hind ankles were puffed.

"Is this another case where a shameful fraud has been perpetuated on the Government, and with the connivance and knowledge of a public official? I have been strongly moved by the proof that men here have come forward and sold horses that would endanger the lives of the gallant men who would depend on them. This witness will not be paid."

Gave No Receipts.

Brampton Gorkum sold a ten-year-old horse for $165 and gave no receipt for the money he got. The veterinary was Dr. Wood. He got his money from a man named Oakes.

C. E. Chute, Waterville, disposed of two horses to W. T. McKay for $360. One of the animals was ten or eleven years old. He was not asked to sign a receipt.

Noble Taylor, Plockland, told the veterinary that his horse was twelve years old. He got $150 for it.

Lazy, but High-Spirited.

Thaddeus Lovilace, Wellsford, got $150 for a horse whose only fault was laziness. Witness caused laughter by saying the horse was very high-spirited in every other way. Oakes paid him, he thought.

G. H. Oakes, secretary of the Conservative club of Kentville, said he paid no vendor. He merely delivered money to McKay.

F. J. Potts, Merwick, informed Dr. Wood, veterinary, that his horse was 12 or 13 years old, but the doctor passed it, and, $140 in cash was paid for it. The horse was slightly sprung in the knees.

$150 for Aged Nag.

N. W. Keddy, Berwick, received $150 for a steed, fourteen years old. He paid $55 for it six years ago. The Government buyer was W. P. McKay and the veterinary Chipman. No age or weight was accepted.

He heard that the horse had a couple of pack spavins, but they did not bother it and he did not tell the veterinary.

Seventeen years was the age of the horse of Kenneth Dr. Berwick, which McKay bought. He did not remember signing any receipt.

NEW YORK ACTRESS PRAISES CANADIANS

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Miss Edna Goodrich, former wife of Nat C. Goodwin, arrived on the American liner St. Paul.

"I was in Ostend when the war broke out," she said, "and immediately offered my services to the Belgian Red Cross, and served as nurse for seven weeks. I then went into France and made the same offer to the French Red Cross, but they told me only trained nurses were accepted. I did a great deal of work in France though.

"I saw a great deal of the Canadian soldiers in France, and they impressed me as Greek gods. It was wonderful to see the Canadian wounded, all magnificent specimens of manhood, begging to be cured in order to get back to the front."

Wonder Is Not That Warsaw Fell But That Russians Escaped

Stanley Washburn, Correspondent With Russians Since Early Part of War Describes Closing Scenes in Warsaw.

MANY BOMBS DROPPED

WARSAW Aug. 4 (delayed)—The noose draws tighter each moment.

Standing on the new bridge, one can see the great German shells burst one after another, while the heavy reverberation shakes the city. Also the Vistula banks can observation balloon, while the sky is dotted with German aeroplanes soaring higher and higher among the shrapnel puffs and bursts. Sharpnel from our guns. I counted fourteen balloons at one aeroplane.

From the roof of the Hotel Bristol I can see the smoke of burning buildings in the suburbs, fired by shells from the German artillery.

Every one deserted, save for the Poles who intend to remain. The evacuation, save for the last of the infantry and guns, seems to be practically completed.

Many Bombs Dropped.

Meantime the German aeroplanes complete their destruction of life and property. On Monday many bombs were dropped, and it is reported twenty-five civilians were killed. One bomb fell between the Hotel de l'Europe and the new church. Others fell in all quarters of the city.

All the bridges are mined, and I have left my motor car on the other side of the Vistula, but I should be surprised were we unable to get out.

While I was crossing the bridge the afternoon four bombs fell in Praga, a suburb on the eastern side of the river.

For three days we have been here waiting the fall of Warsaw for many months. The spectacle of the preparations to abandon it is very depressing. For there is nothing to indicate any feeling of hopelessness. With munitions, said one officer, we could always beat the Germans.

Another said, We don't want peace. When we have plenty of shells we shall take Warsaw back again. We can never be crushed by the hands of the Germans.

Continuous Gun Fire.

August 5, o'clock—I passed the night outside the city on account of the probability of the road being under shell fire.

Just outside the town, since 5 o'clock this morning, there has been continuous heavy gun fire in the direction of the city.

I am returning now in the direction of the city, hoping to get in once more before the bridges are destroyed and the city passes out of Russian hands.

LATER—Warsaw has been given up. The bridges were blown up at 3 o'clock this morning and the German cavalry entered the city at 6 a.m.

It is true Germans has driven the Russians from position after position and given Lemberg back to the enthusiastic Austrians, who, with trembling hands, accepted it as a gheuseous gift.

It is true the world looks upon Galicia as a great moral blow for Russian arms.

But far Germany has achieved her ends, but she has not destroyed armies and has not discouraged troops.

Glory Will be Halved.

Germany forced Russian withdrawals before her, for men cannot fight with fists. The glory of the German advance will be halved when the world knows exactly what Russia had in men, arms and munitions to meet this assault, the greatest, perhaps, ever made in military history. The wonder is not that the Germans won, but that they did not crush the army before them.

With the exception of one army, now reconstituted, the Russians probably suffered far less in personnel than the Germans. They reached, or approximately reached, another point of defence. Their spirits are good, confidence is unshaken and the determination to fight on indefinitely regardless of defeats, is greater than ever.

The Germans have failed in their greatest aim and have shot their last bolt a bolt forged from every resource of men and munitions they could muster after months of preparation. The Russians have receded before it, may recoil again and again, but always to elude its aim.

Task of the Germans.

At the moment of writing Germany faces the identical problem she did two months ago, except she now occupies extra territory, for most part in ruins. The task before her is to repeat the Galician enterprise against an army infinitely better than the one she broke in May. If she can do this she will have the same problem to meet on some other line in another two months.

It simply is a question of how much in time, men and resources Germany has to spend on these costly victories. She may do it once or twice, but there will come a time when she can do it no more. When that time comes Russia will slowly and surely come back step by step until she reclaims her own and has Germany on her knees in the East.

HIS REMARKS WERE RATHER EXPENSIVE

"I did not think there was a man in Canada who would use such language," said Magistrate Dundie this morning when he heard what William Simmons had said to a recruiting sergeant on George street.

Simmons was charged in police court this morning with having acted in a disorderly manner on George street yesterday. He did not think he had been disorderly and claimed he was not drunk at the time.

Simmons is evidently not very loyal to his country. A recruiting officer of the 59th Battalion approached a couple of men on George street yesterday afternoon and entered into conversation with them with respect to recruiting. Simmons approached the trio from across the street and start to say some very nasty things about Kitchener's army and wound up with very disloyal remarks about the King of England and members of the Royal Family. A policeman was standing near and he also heard the conversation and at once arrested Simmons.

The accused came in for a severe talk from the Magistrate this morning and was fined $5.00, to be paid forthwith, or in default of payment 15 days in jail.

German Army Discouraged, Naval Officers Hopeful, Swedish Captain Learns

LONDON, Aug. 10—A Swedish merchant captain, whose home is has arrived in the Thames after an exceptional voyage, but who for obvious reasons does not care to see his name in print, had an interesting tale to tell about the opinions of German naval officers with whom he came in contact, as compared with the pessimism of the military.

When crossing the Baltic he said he was told by a German naval officer, and it was not to be supposed, the ship was taken to the German port of Swinemunde for further examination. The inspection of the Swedish papers finally was completed, but incidentally the captain passed three days in Swinemunde during which he had many opportunities of discussing the progress of the war both with German naval officers and with German military men. For the most part invalided from the front and residing in a wing of a Swinemunde hotel.

It was the opposite opinions expressed by these naval and military men which so much puzzled the neutral skipper. Invariably the latter would preface every argument with the assertion that Germany had proved, and would prove victorious, but they proceeded to qualify this assertion by the remark that, of course, Germany could not hope to prove victorious in a war of exhaustion.

ENGLISH FOOTBALL GETS JOLT FROM COUNCIL

The English football association council has decided that there shall not be any professional football next season, nor will the English cup and the amateur cup be run. It has also decided not to permit football altogether, the view being taken that it is imperative the game should be continued for recreative purposes in so far as it may be played without in any way prejudicing recruiting or the output of war material.

It is significant, as showing the opinion of the governing body of the game with regard to the competitive element in the pastime during the war, that such competitions as may be arranged will not carry with them any concrete reward in the shape of cups or medals.

These decisions were arrived at after a conference with representatives of the two most powerful leagues in England on July 19 and after other steps had been taken to ascertain the views of other important organizations and clubs.

It is true that the football association has departed in a vital matter from the declared decisions of the foot ball league, as the latter decided by a narrow majority that it would be advisable to pay players a sum per match not exceeding $5, but as against this there was the solid recommendation of the Southern league that there should not be any payment next season.

There was consequently a large majority of the leading professional clubs opposed to an remuneration being given to players so long as the war continues. There will be competitive football in England next season, but the clubs will not be asked to make long railway journeys, as they will be grouped in geographically convenient centres.

Nothing definite has yet been done so far as the clubs in London and the south are concerned, but it is practically certain that a league will be formed confined to the metropolitan clubs and others within an hour's distance of London.

The Southern league will not provide any football next season, but several of its clubs are expected to join with football league clubs to

Speaker, Lewis and Hooper Are Star Throwers

"Wow! Did you see that throw?"

Such an expression has been on the lips of almost every baseball fan dozens of times, as they have witnessed outfielders, after making a beautiful running catch, whip the ball from deep in the outfield to home plate without hesitating to consider the distance.

"Just like a shot from a rifle," these fans have added as the throws have panked into the catcher's mit in time to catch a runner attempting to score from third, and they marveled at the accuracy.

The fans would marvel still more if they knew that under the conditions the marksmanship of the outfielder was more accurate than would have been that of the average rifleman.

Perfect Marksmanship.

The mark-manship of an outfielder is more perfect than that of the average rifleman under the conditions mentioned.

If some of the followers of the latter activity doubt this, just try running backward or sideways for 15 or 20 yards and then without hesitating attempt to make a bullseye 225 or 250 feet away. Then, after you have failed by several feet or yards, 'fess up.

Instinct is the Secret.

The secret of the superior accuracy of the outfielder over the rifle man is instinct.

The instinct to use the arm in throwing is one known to every boy and man and many girls and women. It evidences itself very early in life and the throwing of sticks and stones or other objects among boys of meanre age, is a custom well known to everybody and recorded many hundreds of times on juvenile records.

This instinct is developed to the nth power in the major league ball player and it is because of this that his throwing, under the conditions he works, is more accurate than would be the marksmanship of the average rifle man under the same conditions.

Wonderful Trio.

Among the most accurate throwers in the big leagues to-day, the trio of Red Sox gardeners, Tris Speaker, Harry Hooper and Duffy Lewis, form the greatest collection. The St. Louis Browns boast Shotten; the St. Louis Cardinals, Wilson; the Washington Senators, Clyde Milan; the New York Giants, George Burns, and the Brooklyn Dodgers, Zack Wheat, who with the three Bostonians class as the exclusive set of fine-whipped outfielders.

Time and again these men have saved games by their quick and accurate throws to the plate after long running catches in the outfield, and baseballdom will wager odds that they can hit a target, after a backward or sideways run, more often than can the average rifle man after a similar ramble.

NATIONAL GAME SLOWER THAN EVER, VETS CLAIM

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Is the national game slower from a playing standpoint this year than in former years?

John McGraw swears it is. So do a lot of other veteran baseball men.

"The only reason the Cubs ever stayed on top as long as they did is because the National league is playing the rottenest ball it has played in a decade," opines Jawn. "And the same goes with the Phils."

Some caustic individuals may come back with the assertion that Mr McGraw is prejudiced, inasmuch as his Giants have loitered around the second division and the cellar most of the season. They cannot, however, say the same regarding such utterances by other persons long connected with the game, who, in support of their contentions, cite the many pitching come-backs of this season.

Of these probably the most glaring is that of Jack Coombs. The iron man was considered through for two years. When Connie Mack unloaded him on Chelley Ebbets at the start of the present season, the wise ones gave Ebbets the laugh. Those guffaws now are strangely stilled. The veteran has been chucking one of the best brands of baseball seen this season.

Many Pitchers "Come Back."

Nap Rucker is another example. The famous old side-wheeler has kept Brooklyn on the baseball map almost single-handed for a decade. Last year he slipped and the wise ones began printing obituary notices. He has been fairly successful this season.

Ed Walsh is still another. It had been several seasons since the Supreme Chancellor of all fingers held the enemy to six blows and won his game, hands down, yet he went out against the Athletics not long since, and did that very thing, and the 22 odd thousand fans who saw him put it over went home convinced that the Big Moose was right again. George Chalmers of the Phillies is also cited.

The doubters point to a whole raft of batters in support of their theory. The most prominent of these is Chief Meyers, McGraw's veteran Indian maskman. The chief finished last season with a slugging average of .286. "He's done," chirped the dopesters. Since June the Indian has been slugging the ball at a rate of .365, although his season's average is a good bit below that, due to poor work at the start of the season.

Fred Merkle and Larry Doyle occupy similar positions. Merkle quit playing in 1914 with a .258 mark, and Doyle but two points above him. They are now hitting the ball at a clip above .340, and are crowding Jake Daubert close for the leadership of the league. Art. Fletcher is another. There are a lot of 'em.

Whether these facts indicate that the game is slower or not, the affirmative debaters have a powerful argument.

THE EXAMINER TOBACCO FUND

A Canadian officer, in urging tobacco and cigarette gifts for the volunteers from the Dominion, states that the English "Tommies" receive as many as 70 to 100 cigarettes per week, in addition to a goodly supply of tobacco. It is now up to Canadians to look after their own, and they will do it. All they need is some practical means of forwarding these comforts, and The Examiner Fund supplies it.

Up till now, anyone desirous of forwarding cigarettes or tobacco to the firing line had to pay three or four times the value of the package in transport and duty charges, and then could never be sure of the delivery of the parcel. The Examiner Fund makes it a simple matter; all that is now required is the name of the regiment you wish to benefit, together with your subscription. All the detail work of shipping, addressing and keeping records is looked after by The Examiner, whose arrangements with the War Office, Admiralty and Transportation Companies, permit of the free carriage and distribution of the Tobacco Gifts. This means that instead of paying about three times more for transportation and duty than the actual value of the tobacco or cigarettes, the full amount of your subscription goes to buying the tobacco. Not one penny is deducted by The Examiner for the work involved in looking after this Fund, and not one penny goes to transportation companies or inland revenue. More than that, your subscription to The Examiner Fund buys more than is possible in the ordinary way, for the Tobacco and Cigarettes are obtained by arrangement with the Overseas Club from the duty free warehouse of Martins, Ltd., of London.

PARTICULARS OF TOBACCO FUND.

1. Every cent contributed goes to purchase tobacco and cigarettes.

2. By arrangement with the British and French Governments the tobacco is packed in bond and shipped duty free. This enables the Overseas Club to secure tobacco and cigarettes at the lowest possible price.

3. For one quarter (25c) the Overseas Club are able to supply: 50 cigarettes, 4 oz. smoking mixture, a box of matches and a postcard. For $1.00 the Overseas Club can supply: 50 cigarettes, 4 oz. smoking tobacco, 1 briar pipe, 1 tinder lighter, 1 rubber-lined pouch, some matches and a postcard.

The postcard is a most pleasing feature, bringing as it does the sender into personal touch with the receiver. In every package subscribed for, the postcard carrying the subscriber's name and address is enclosed, thus enabling the soldier to acknowledge his thanks.

4. Packages may be sent to individuals provided the right number and regiment is given. However, in the case of "Personals" like this it is essential that the name of the soldier to benefit and the name of the donor be kept together or earmarked in such a way that the clerk shipping the parcel will insert the right postcard in the parcel. This can be very easily done by putting a number opposite the donor's name on collecting card and putting the same number opposite the name of the soldier to benefit. The names and addresses of soldiers to benefit will of course have to be kept on a separate sheet or card.

5. It is very important to note that the tobacco and cigarette parcels can only be sent to soldiers on active service; and not those in England or Canada.

6. Packages can also be sent to the British Navy or to the Belgian soldiers, but in the latter case the Overseas Club cannot undertake to deliver packages to individuals.

MR. DALY'S MARE HAS CONTINUED SUCCESS

Mr. F. Jas. Daley received a wire yesterday that his pacing mare Yedno won her race at Rockport, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland, on Monday, in three easy heats. The best time was 2.11 1-4. "Yedno" had no difficulty in leading the field in each heat. This mare has been a sensation on the Cleveland track. Her next appearance will be in Montreal. She will be taken down by express with "Grand Opera," the horse Mr. Daley owned a year ago and sold in March, and which has not been defeated this year. In Mr. Fogarty of Rochester, Mr. Daley has a very capable driver. "Yedno" was led by her owner past the stand at Cleveland recently, the crowd giving Mr. Daley and his speedy mare a great ovation according to the Sportsman's columns.

"GRANDMOTHER"

I knew it was time for her to wake
And thought I'd give her a little shake,
Or tap at her door, or softly call,
But I hadn't the heart for that at all.
She looked so sweet and so quiet there,
Lying back in her high arm chair,
With her dear white hair and a little smile,
That means she's loving you all the while

I didn't make a speck of noise,
I knew she was dreaming of little boys
And girls, who lived with her long ago
And then went to heaven she told me so

I went close, but I didn't speak
One word, but I gave her on her cheek
The softest bit of a little kiss,
Just like a whisper, and then said this
"Grandmother, dear, it's time for tea"
She opened her eyes and looked at me
And said, "Why, pet, I have just now dreamed
Of a little angel who came, and seemed
To kiss me lovingly on my face"
She pointed right at the very place

I never told her 'twas only me,
But took her hand, and we went to tea
Sidney Dare.

USE THE REGINA ELECTRIC CLEANER
For Carpets, Rugs, Floors, Upholstery, Curtains, Walls, Ceilings, Beds, Furniture, etc., etc.

THE new REGINA ELECTRIC CLEANER is not only a high grade vacuum cleaner, but a sweeper as well, having a revolving brush inside the nozzle. The movement of the cleaner over the carpet operates the brush through a set of gears inclosed in a dustproof gear case. Thus the action of the brush is positive, and inasmuch as it is driven in the opposite direction to which the cleaner is being used it will loosen all threads, lint, etc., the suction drawing them into the bag. The Model "K" is the only electric cleaner having such a positively driven brush. This brush also raises the nap of the carpet, allowing the current of air to penetrate to the bottom of the fabric. The brush automatically adjusts itself to any kind of rug or carpet.

It is made largely of aluminum, is light in weight and easily handled. The nozzle is twelve inches wide and allows of a very large air displacement, with consequent efficient results. It is so designed that it operates effectively in corners and close to base-boards and can also be used for cleaning stair carpets. The electric motor is high grade and consumes only about one cent's worth of current per hour. It can readily be used under furniture, beds, etc.

SNOBBISHNESS DIES

War Showing True Values in Life, Rejoices London Paper

Two things are of good augury for the future, says a London Daily Graphic writer. The first is the remarkable disappearance during these times of war of all traces of snobbishness from among us. Snobbishness is one of our besetting sins; it implies the worship of wealth, and where it prevails a false tone is given to all intercourse, a false direction to the expenditure of money, to production and to many activities of life. This snobbishness is disappearing save among a few individuals who are to be found in every age and country. The men and women of the new generation will be poor in this world's wealth—it will take many years to pay off the cost of the war—their hearts will be heavy with the remembrance of the suffering and agony of our present conflict, but, they will be spared many of our errors and disappointments, and they will see more clearly than we have done what things are most truly valuable in life.

NEW GERMAN TORPEDOES

Quickly and "Cheaply" Made But Cannot Go Far

According to the latest information the German torpedoes have a ring of from 1,000 to 1,500 yards. Instead of carrying 250 pounds or 300 pounds of guncotton or other high explosive, the instruments have a charge of but 100 pounds or less. Because of the shorter range and lighter weight, the ordinary intricate mechanism is simplified. Indeed, some of the propelling parts necessary in the greater torpedo are omitted. Probably the most valuable saving is in the time of construction. These torpedoes are built and completely tested in five months, while ten months or a year is required to perfect a long-range instrument. The new torpedo costs about $2,250. This does not include the explosive charge. The German long-range torpedo, 12,000 yards, costs $15,000, while the intermediate range torpedo, 4,000 to 7,000 yards, costs about $6,500.

ELDER STATESMEN OF JAPAN ARE MASTERS

Four Wonderful Veterans Are Powers Behind Mikado—Their Cautious Foreign Policy

Genro or Elder Statesman is a name given to the group of old statesmen who served the Mikado and the Japanese State during fifty years without intermission in important posts. All of them are men of patriotic sentiment, of original genius, and of an enterprising spirit. They have lived to see that great restoration of Imperial complete, and to see the country rise from an insignificant Oriental State to a first-class power.

The influence which these statesmen command in Japanese politics is far stronger and their popularity is a little greater than is usually admitted by the "yellow" papers. The last four to remain were Prince Marshal Yamagata, Marquis Inouye, Marquis Matsugata, and Prince Marshal Oyama. Of these four, Marshal Oyama is a simple warrior renownwned for great services as the highest field commander in the Chino-Japanese war and the Russo-Japanese war. But like all the others he has wielded steadily an enormous influence.

By War and Finance

Prince Marshal Yamagata, the president of the Privy Council, belonging to the great military clan of Choshu, has long been the most influential general and statesman of Japan. His influence in army circles has been unparalleled, second only to that of the Emperor himself.

Next comes Marquis Inouye, who has outlived his vigor of body, but not of mind. He is also from the Choshu clan. In restoration days his stand in favor of the "open door" caused him to be attacked one night outside his house and badly wounded. Marquis Inouye commanded the same influence in the Japanese financial world as Yamagata in the military circles. Old Japanese firms were like river boats suddenly dashed out to the high seas when western methode found sway in Japan. The largest of these, the group of the Mitsui family, was saved by Marquis Inouye, whose influence was already firmly established in the Government. Several other old firms were similarly succored. Marquis Matsurgata, who is from the Satsuma clan, also exercises considerable influence in the financial world.

Strong as the Emperor

Now comes the question how much influence these old men had. Inasmuch as their influence was derived politically from the past merits and the implicit confidence placed in them by the Emperor Meiji and the present Emperor, their political ascendancy may be said to be in rough proportion to the measure of sway the Emperor commands over the people. They have become now and then the target of press attacks, the object of popular fury artificially fanned by the anti-genro papers. Their position has stood nevertheless firm and unshaken.

One of the most important branches of politics about which the elder Japanese men occupied themselves in former days was negotiations with foreign powers. Constant intimidation, threats and menaces worried them almost to death at the possible approach of a national calamity. This has left indelible impression in their memory of the troubled past. They still entertain a vague fear of Europeans. To them Europeans appear greater and wiser than the Japanese. The case is different with young statesmen. There is consequently a tendency among the young statesmen to preach rather high-handed measures in diplomatic relations, while they are as a rule constantly fettered and trammelled by orders from the genro.

Flashlight Equipment

Intended for point-blank firing at close range, a flashlight equipment has been devised for high-power rifles which simplifies the aiming of a weapon when it is used for shooting wild beasts after dark. Unlike other lighting apparatus heretofore introduced for night hunting, the beam of light has the shape of an inverted letter "T." This character is brilliantly emblazoned upon whatever object the shaft of light strikes, as, for instance the shoulder of a lioness. The hunter in this way is able to point his rifle almost as one would the nozzle of a hose, for upon firing, his bullet will strike the point indicated by the character. Just enough light is diffused outside of the plane of the "T" shaft says Popular Mechanics, to illuminate dimly a small field and show the outline of an animal.

Germany takes a census every 5 years, England, every ten years.

SALMON CATCH BELOW NORMAL

Seward, Alaska, Aug. 11.—A poor year for salmon packers with a falling off of 40 to 50 per cent. from a full pack was reported by Captain Hansen, of the steamer Santa Ana, here from Bering Sea ports.

The Bristol Bay canneries, according to Hansen, lacked 40 per cent. of their usual pack, while at Kodiak, Uyak, Seldova and Port Graham the season closed with only half a pack. A full pack, however, is expected from Chignik and Port Muller.

The heaviest run in Bristol Bay came July 4, while fishermen were celebrating. One fisherman caught three thousand salmon.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

J. P. Morgan & Co. are believed to have made upward of $25,000,000 since the war began.

"Never swim for the ship that has left the dock," was the epigrammatic advice given by James P. Travers, of the New York Stock Exchange firm of Baruch Brothers, to a customer who was lamenting the fact that he had missed the advance in one of the war stocks and was wondering whether he should buy at the prevailing price.

In their market observations Baruch Brothers say: "Few people stop to think and realize that the present situation is without precedent; that not only has the domestic trade situation improved, but the large war orders from abroad have stimulated the revival of activity in our industries, with the prospect of added benefits to come from the same sources. Cheap money and practical assurance of both large agricultural yields and good prices for our products can only mean an extended area of prosperity for this country, regardless of international developments that may arise."

Wheat exports from the United States and Canada last week totalled 3,192,650 bushels, compared with 2,866,040 last week and 6,594,343 a year ago, says Bradstreet's. Exports for the five weeks ending August 5 were 16,810,518 bushels, compared with 34,995,826 last year.

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—The Canadian Government railways have ordered one thousand new steel freight cars from Canadian companies for immediate delivery, in anticipation of requirements for moving the wheat crop. It is reported the railways are negotiating for large purchases of second-hand American cars for the purpose.

Allies at Dardanelles Gain 200 Yards Toward Peak Dominating Peninsula

Gradually Making Their Way Toward the Peak of Achi Baba---A Footing Alsoflas Been Gained on Chunuk Bahr

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Allies' forces on the Dardanelles are gradually making their way toward the peak of Achi Baba, which dominates the Gallipoli Peninsula. They occupy the line of the brook, Kereves Dere, and during the last few days have made a further gain of two hundred yards on a front of three hundred yards east of the Krithia road, according to an official announcement. A footing also has been gained on Chunuk Bahr and another landing effected elsewhere, the statement adds.

The text of the announcement follows:

"Sir Ian Hamilton reports that fighting at several points on Gallipoli Peninsula has taken place during the last few days. Substantial progress has been made.

"In the southern zone two hundred yards on a front of three hundred yards has been gained east of the Krithia road and has been held in spite of determined counter attacks which have been repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy. Repeated attacks by the Turks elsewhere in this zone were beaten off.

"Several attacks by French corps have been made and their whole hearted co-operation has proved of the greatest assistance.

"In the Ansac zone a footing in the Chunuk Bahr portion of Sari Bahr also has been gained and the crest occupied after fierce fighting and the successful storming of strongly held positions. Here, too, the enemy's losses have been considerable. The advance was commenced at night under cover of a searchlight from a destroyer.

"Elsewhere a fresh landing has been successfully effected and considerable progress made.

"Six hundred and thirty prisoners have been taken, together with one Nordenfeldt, two bomb mortars, nine machine guns and a large number of bombs. Scattered about are quanties of the enemy's rifles, ammunition and equipment."

Destruction; Rapine and Disaster Follow German Invaders in Russia

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The desolation along the northern Baltic from Memel to Libau and as far north as the Gulf of Riga, overrun by the German forces from the land side and bombarded by the German fleet from the sea side, is vividly described in Warsaw papers received here. They state that a trip from Memel to Libau shows the terrible distress left in the wake of the advancing army. Entire villages of several hundred houses, like Kuniginki, are totally burned, having suffered most from the fire of the ships. One of the most noted seashore resorts, Pologna, was bombarded and sixty of its principal summer villas destroyed. The palace of Count Tyszkiewicz, whose family has intermarried in America, escaped destruction, but the chapel of the palace was partly destroyed. The hotels and casino and most of the villas stretching along the sea front were burned, and portions of the hotel remaining were later used as barracks for General von Buelow's cavalry forces. Many were killed, including a number of children, during the occupation of Pologna.

At Libau a monopoly of the bread supply was established under German military direction, all flour being taken by them, except about two pounds allowed to each inhabitant. Among the many arrested were two orthodox Russian pastors who were accused of praying to be saved from the invaders, but were released on the plea that their prayers were against invaders of all nationalities. The fortifications of Libau, particularly on the sea front, were strengthened by large forces of men. The visit to Libau of Prince Henry, brother of the Kaiser, for a conference with Field Marshall von Hindenburg, was the occasion of much ceremony. The campaign soon afterward developed northward to Kiga and then in a great circle southward around Warsaw.

Outside of Lubin the surrounding country is devastated and abandoned. This is specially true of the districts of Kalvaria and Marjamper the grain fields, usually richly productive, being unsown and in places blackened from fires. The districts of Suwalki and Kowno have similarly suffered. Many incidents are given of bandits who have made their appearance in the country districts, owing to the distress and complete prostration of the civil organization, and commit wide spread depredations.

The Warshaw Kourier prints a statement from Petrograd giving an official reply to attacks against Jews in the distribution of good. The reply states that the committee makes distributions without any disinction of nationality or religion. The only restriction is against applicants who seek to get supplies for the purposes of speculation, and the reply says there are unfortunately many Jews in this class. The warehouses, it is explained, are meant only to meet the daily needs of the poorer people. As evidence of their impartiality it is cited that from May 31 to June 4, out of a total of 97,877 people thus assisted, 66,860 were Christians and 31,017, or thirty-one per cent., were Jews. The reply maintains this is a sufficient answer to charges of discrimination against the Jews. Also it is pointed out that the Jews have a number of relief organizations of their own.

A report is given of an address at Cracow by Dr. Lydlowsky on the destruction of many art treasures and historic monuments during the campaign in West Galicia. Many of the fine old paintings in the churches of that locality, as well as the churches themselves and their richly carved altars, have disappeared before the passing armies.

The Modern Entrenching Spade

The present Canadian Entrenching Spade is a very notable and admirable exception to the general rule, that combination tools are not a success.

It is an invention of a Canadian and is protected by a Canadian patent. It is one of the very first patented inventions to be extremely used by the Canadian forces in this great war. It combines in one very simple and efficient device, two very distinct and highly important instruments—i. e. the entrenching spade itself, and a shield and rifle rest. It is simply a spade blade of well-known shape but of specially hard steel which will act as a shield. It is made to be readily detachable from its handle. A little to one side of its centre it is provided with an opening slightly larger than a rifle barrel. Through this the soldier can thrust his rifle the hole being sufficiently large enough to enable him to sight it. With the blade driven vertically into the ground, the rifle rests on the lower wall of this opening and thus has its weight easily supported. While crouching behind the blade in firing, the soldier is amply protected.

This device is actually in use on the firing line in large numbers. It is one of the few inventions made since the opening of the war and almost immediately put into use extensively.

The army and navy officials of England, France, Italy, Canada, and the United States, as well as the patent offices of these countries are being continually flooded with thousands of inventions for all possible uses in this great war, and it is highly probable that one result of the war may be the production of many really valuable inventions which would otherwise never have come to light. It is to be hoped so, at least.

FALL WHEAT IS SPROUTING IN PETERBORO' COUNTY

Amount of Damage Done by Recent Rains Is Considerable—Some of the Crop May Be Saved For Feed

MILLERS REFUSE WHEAT

Considerable damage has resulted to the crops in Peterborough County owing to the wet weather of the past few days. Much of the fall wheat and other field crops has commenced to sprout in the field and unless the weather improves, the grain that is cut will be a total loss.

Charles H. Watts, of the Dominion Millers' Association, says it is somewhat early following the heavy rains to form a definite idea as to the damage in Ontario. The amount would depend on the way the farmers handle the grain from now on, particularly the grain cut and still in the fields. Some wheat already shipped to millers had already been refused, because it had not been properly dried, and will have to be used for feed. Provided the weather be anything like favorable there will be little, if any, damage to the standing grain, but every care will have to be given to the crops already cut and the grain thoroughly dried before threshed. If this is not generally done, the damage will be enormous.

Some Sprouting.

The rainy weather has already caused some of the cut grain to sprout, but this is not entirely spoiled, as it may be used for feed and in this regard is even better than unsprouted grain.

It will be a week or ten days before any definite statement as to crop conditions can be made, the situation is that crops will depend very largely on the weather of the next two weeks.

Russians Have Now Begun To Evacuate Vilna

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A despatch to Reuter's News Agency from Petrograd says the first steps for the evacuation of Vilna, about fifty-five miles south east of Kovno, have been taken by the removal of some of the public institutions and the contents of the public library and museums.

The railroad from Vilna southward, the despatch adds, has been the object of active attention by German Zeppelins. Twelve bombs, five of which were incendiary, have been dropped on Bialystok, while missiles also were dropped on the Kovel Kovel railroad station, the despatch continues. The damage done was slight and traffic was not interrupted.

COST FARMERS $20,000,000?

Department of Agriculture oNt Altogether Pessimistic, However.

The storm damage may cost Ontario farmers about twenty million dollars, according to a statement by the Department of Agriculture, though there is still prospect for a good average crop.

The loss on the twenty million dollar wheat crop is placed at ten per cent. Farmers had doubled their acreage in this crop this year.

There will probably be $10,000,000 loss on the oat crop which is beaten down and in which there will be a prevalence of smut.

Barley has been beaten down some, the department remarks on this crop. It is not thought to be badly damaged.

Second crop hay is coming along well, and a little rain may be expected in this regard.

Corn has not been seriously injured, and is looking better now that, at the beginning of the season.

Roots have been affected beneficially if at all, though potatoes have had too much wet weather.

Germany's Peace Proposals to Russia

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12.—The newspapers Novoe Vremya, declared it has positive information that Germany has made separate proposals to Russia "through a private agency," on the following basis.

That Russia's frontiers shall remain intact: That Russia shall be given Galicia and the Dardanelles: That Germany shall take Egypt: Promising later to restore it to Turkey, and that Germany shall have a free hand in continuing the war against the Allies.

Australian Scientist Says Eucalyptus Will Destroy Germ.

Melbourne, Australia, Aug. 11.—The discovery of a specific for cerebro-spinal meningitis was announced to-day by Dr Richard Ball, director of the bacteriological laboratory of the University of Melbourne. Dr. Ball stated that eucalyptus would destroy the germ.

The treatment of cerebro-spinal meningitis has long presented a serious problem for medical science. Up to a comparatively short time ago it may be said that there was no effective treatment for this disease, known popularly as spotted fever, or the black death.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

She didn't want to be pestered with the Haguses, but whenever all her men-folk had to be away over night, Dan insisted on the Haguses takin' up watch at his place. He said the boys were to be trusted and Baldy couldn't hit enough in a few days to more than offset the worry he bired from Dan's mind in techin' that if Mollie really needed a man she'd have one on call. It was never intended that the whole pated of 'em were to turn out and hunt straws, but that was their custom, and I never in built believe it was Mollie herself who put 'em up to it. Her heart was so tender that she fed the younger Haguses every time she set eyes on 'em, and so it rested her to get 'em out of her sight.

I glanced down the road and saw that Mandy and Doodles were makin' mighty poor time, and I guessed the reason for that, too. If Mandy stayed away long enough, why, Mrs. Cooper would cook supper by habit, and not think a thing of it. If Mandy just told how cute Doodles had been and that she hadn't had the heart to hurry him.

Then I tied my hoss in a clump and ran down the road a piece to where a couple o' trees grew opposite to hide my crossin' from the house. I crept up to the house cautious for I didn't know for sure just which side Panther would angle around to before goin' in; but I went fast, too, and presently I heard Mollie Cooper singin' a lullaby, so I knew I'd be in time. Panther had too much cat-blood in him to finish his prey before tantalizin' it to madness first and I knew he felt himself safe or he'd never have come at such an hour.

The' was a big sittin'-room at the Cooper house with a front and back porch, the front one hung full o' vines, the back one boarded up part way and lattice the rest. I crept cautious and slow and I aimed for the front porch. It was more in view of the road in gettin' there, but I figgered the shelter would be better, and I didn't want any useless fuss.

Panther had forfeited any claims he had to life, and I wanted to be sure to get him. The house faced west and the sun was low, it shone right through the front windows to the back porch, and if I could just get to the north side of the porch where the vines were heaviest, I would be shaded but could see all that went on in the room and most of what took place on the back porch.

Presently Panther stuck his head around the north corner of the house and made a close examination in all directions and then he dropped back. The second his head disappeared I ran for the porch and was planted before he reached the back porch. I had my gun in my hand, but I didn't want to kill him until I could find out exactly what his game was.

Mrs. Cooper was sittin' in front of the open fire, givin' Sunshine a bath. Did ya ever see a baby getin' a bath—a nice, round, dimply, rose-tinted baby who didn't seem to need washin' any more 'n the flokers do at sunrise? Sunshine's clothes were in a little pile by Mollie's chair and it was plain to see that these clothes had been rollin' about in the ashes on the hearth, but that baby looked as clean as the clouds on a bright day in winter.

Well, if ever you have seen such a sight, you know as well as I do that it gives you sensations and emotions most peculiar—somethin' the way you'd feel if ya managed to get a peek into Heaven and caught a she-angel a-preenin' her wings. So far as I know, a woman never does look at a man without her eyes demandin' somethin' of him; but it's all give when she looks at her baby, and as Mollie cuddled that little pink rolypoly in her firm round arms, Sunshine kicked up her fat little legs, waved her chubby hands, cooed and gooed and gurgled, and carried on high.

As I looked at this sight, it seemed to me that nothin' in men's clothes could harm that pair—and then I caught sight of Panther lookin' in from the back gallery. A ragged notch shot out of the rim of his hat and a bloody nick in his left ear showed that he had recently been where the weather was warm. His ears set in tight to his head, and he had a long, soft, silky moustache which plumb filled me with envy. He had a good-shaped head, had Panther, a good chin and nose, and extra good brows; but his eyes! They were the hungriest eyes in the world. The colour-centres were greenish gray and they floated between his lids with a rim o' white all around 'em, and a speck o' livin' fire idazin' out from the pupils.

He pressed his face up close to the glass and Mollie Cooper turned and saw it. For a moment they faced each other, and Mollie clasped the baby to her breast spasmodical. Then Panther pulled down his hat and stepped to the door.

Mrs. Cooper had never seen the scoundrel before but she recognized him by his eyes, and it took her last ounce o' grit to get hold of herself by the time he came in the door.

"How do you do?" sez she. "Just take a seat while I finish puttin' the baby to bed."

Panther walked over close to her and stood lookin' down at the infant, scowlin' at it fierce, while Mollie rubbed it slow with a towel, playin' for all the time she could get. At first Sunshine wrinkled up her face a bit at sight of him; but she was so used to lordin' it over us boys that she felt full competent to boss the toughest lookin' stranger who might chance to happen in, and presently she wrinkled up her little ping rabbit-nose, held out her chubby hands, and sez, "Kee-eee kee."

A queer, half-frightened look o' surprise came to Panther's face, about like what you'd expect a tough cuss to wear if he died firm in the faith that he had won eternal brimstone, and then had Saint Peter rush out to meet him, shake hands hearty, link arms, parade him through the pearly gates in style, and turn him over to King David as bein' the sort of a good-reefer who could gentle him to Heavenly ways without makin' him gun-shy right at the start.

Panther was plumb embarrassed; he pulled his moustache down to his chin, shifted on his feet, shot out a chuckle, and sez to Mollie: "Well, what do you think o' that?"

"Take her in your arms," sez she.

"Oh Lord, no!" sez Panther, backin' away.

Now, Mollie Cooper wasn't yearnin' to have Panther Emmons even look at little Sunshine; but when she saw that the baby had put quivers into Panther's knees, why the last speck o' scare left her own face, and she smiled up at Panther as though he had been her youngest brother. "Pshaw, man," sez she, "don't be afraid of a baby. You were a baby yourself, once."

"Yes," sez Panther, "but I outgrew it a long while ago."

Mrs. Cooper's face flushed with pride, both in her baby and at the game again' time she was playin'. "Take hold o' this baby," she ordered; "it'll do you more good 'n anything 'at ever happened to ya."

Panther put his hands behind his back and shook his head. "Uhn-uh," sez he, shakin' his head. "I'm scared I might drop it."

"You're surely not that careless," sez Mrs. Cooper. "Let's see your hands."

Mollie looked at 'em critical. "What they need most is washin'," sez she; "but there's isn't a mite o' reason why they couldn't hold a baby. This baby's daddy rolls her around as though she was a rubber ball, and his hands are bigger 'n rougher 'n yours are."

"Mebbe so," sez Panther, lookin' regretful, "but then they've had more experience." He paused and looked down at the baby who smiled up at him as confidin' as though he were a thing of beauty and a joy forever. His eyes were still hungry, but it was a new kind of hunger and the rest of his face was softened out wonderful. He tugged at his moustache thoughtful, his moustache bein' his greatest pride, and then he looked sheepish but determined and sez in a husky voice, "Tell you what I wish you would do, ma'am; I wish you'd just let me kiss her once, on the back o' the neck."

Sunshine certainly did have the most satisfyin' assortment o' curves in the back of her neck 'at ever got rounded up in one collection; but Mollie put her hand over this spot and drey the baby up to her. "Oh, no," seh she, "that's where her daddy kisses her and that's private property."

"All right," sez Panther, with a grin; "I ain't as proudful as some. You just point me out some part that's still open range and I'll pick me out a location there."

Mollie turned the baby so her back was towards Panther. "Any place below the back of the neck," sez she.

Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as, change of water, change of climate, change of diet, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits, etc.

Never neglect what, at first sight, appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea, for if you do some serious bowel trouble may ensue.

Mrs. Wm. Bartlett, Stanley, N.B., writes: "Last summer our little boy, age 1½ years, took diarrhoea. He got so bad as to pass blood. We procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after I had given him the third dose he was all right. I would not be without it, as I consider it a household remedy. It is a God-send to any family."

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

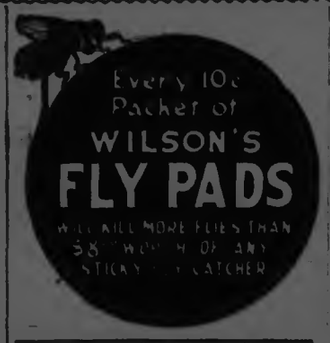
OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Pearl of the Crossroads

How She Met Her Fate.

By FREDERICK BRIGGS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.



Some one said that a sailorman was good for nothing but to chase about the world and send people presents. Pearl Smith had known this all her life, though perhaps she had never resolved it into just that expression.

She drew the line at having more than one man on the same ship. Still, this was not at all inconvenient, for there were sometimes no less than fourteen men of war, besides a score of merchant ships, in the crossroads of the Pacific at one time.

The girl came by the prosaic name of Smith because her father's name had been something else in some other country. He came to Honolulu before the cable was in good working order and remained. Marrying a half caste Kanaka girl, he had kept a sailors' boarding house on King's road since Pearl was a baby. The presents had been coming in since the little girl was big enough to climb on a sailorman's knee, and their volume increased with her size. She was grown up at fourteen.

To see her then was like being wakened from a sweet sleep on a balmy afternoon by having great clusters of red, red roses pressed to one's cheeks. Young men dropping in at the Crossroads swore that they would never go to sea again, only to ship with the next tide for the Indian ocean in search of a pearl to match her skin.

She was like Honolulu days. The shimmering softness of her skin matched the warm afternoon skies. Rich reds of the island sunsets burned in her full, dimpled mouth. Tropic twilights lay behind her inky eyelashes, deepening to midnight in her long hair.

Men of war's men and merchant sailors sent different presents. The navy men leaned toward fancy jewelry and manicure sets, while the traders stuck to silk, uncut rubies, loose pearls, ivory fans and ostrich plumes.

This from the young men. To enumerate the junk that was dumped at the feet of this island goddess by silly old sea captains and others would be to copy the cargo bills of an East and West India tradesman. There would also be a list of small animals and birds, with a number of arctic treasures appended. Pearl kept what she fancied, and her father sold the rest.

As for a girl accepting presents from a dozen men at the same time, it must be remembered that Pearl lived neither east of Frisco nor west of Suez, which is only another way of saying that the girl was bred in a man's country, where anything a woman gets is so much for her gain and no less for her honor.

New admirers invariably meant more presents. But when a sailorman can jolly his superior officer and get anything he wants just for the asking women had better beware of him. When he stands six feet in his socks, laughs out of big blue eyes and conceals a cello note in a drawling voice so much the worse for the women. Heine—that was as far as they got with his name aboard ship, and it will suffice here—Heine was all of this and more. He was an American bluejacket, boatswain's mate of the destroyer Shark.

There is one amusement the Hawaiians have which Americans do not possess. We are enthusiastic surf bathers and are good swimmers, but a sight that is seen in Hawaiian waters is never seen on an American coast. A Hawaiian takes with him to the beach a board, usually about twice his length. This board he carries out as far as he can, then, placing himself on it, it bears him, forced by the waves, back again to the beach. Those who are not expert at this exercise may lie flat on the board, but those who are trained to it stand erect, balancing their bodies as they roll toward the shore.

He met Pearl at Waikiki beach. She was shooting the surf when Heine saw her first. Standing upright with outflung arms, she balanced on her polished board of kamani wood as it raced ahead of a giant breaker. Swift as the wave she flashed past the swimming sailor, but as the waters broke over his head he remembered every line of her beautiful body. The grace of her attitude struck him harder than the wave. Turning, he swam strongly toward the beach, where the spent roller had landed the fairy surf rider.

Half a dozen men were begging Pearl to be allowed to take her board out to the reef again, but she laughed them away with a flash of milk white teeth and struggled out alone. Heine met her a hundred fathoms from the beach, where the water came almost to his shoulders as he stood on the sand.

"I'll carry your board for you!" he cried as the girl broke through a wave almost upon him.

Startled, she turned her head, and the board slipped, striking on her flower mouth. As the blood came Heine caught her in his arms. The wave receding, shut the other bathers from view, and for ten seconds the sailorman held the girl close to his heart.

"My [illegible] will swell!" she panted struggling to free herself.

But Heine jostled her, just as he [illegible]ed. The [illegible] of the Shark, and [illegible] had checked her self [illegible] and bathing costume at the bathhouse and was riding back to town with him, holding her handkerchief to the swelling lip.

Three days later the fleet was ready to sail. Dusky singers with their tiny guitars strummed the sad "Aloha Oe"—"Farewell"—in every street. Pearl managed her other admirers so that Heine might have the last evening. When the time came for a final good-by Heine told her that he was coming back to Honolulu some day.

Pearl studied his face; then she pouted.

"That's what they all say!"

The sailor's eyes danced as he kissed her bruised mouth; then he was gone.

This time Pearl did not look for a present. She would have preferred the sailor back again. But the gift came. It was a brooch set with a genuine ruby. Heine bought the uncut stone from a lascar mess attendant. It cost him $65 to have it cut and polished, and the ruby was valuable.

"To match your lips—from Heine," was the word that came with the jewel.

Pearl's heart was filled with fear. Sailormen who sent presents never came back. Did she not have cream and rose pearls from the remittance man in Ceylon and a black diamond to rival her eyes? There was only one other man whom she had longed to see again—an English mate who sent her a perfect pair of pigeon blood rubies from Bombay. The jewels were torn from the eyes of a Hindu god, and the Hindus tore the mate's eyes from his head in revenge. But Pearl did not know this. She fastened Heine's gift on her bosom and put the other jewels away.

Heine was discharged from the naval service shortly after his visit to Hawaii, and, without informing Pearl, he returned to Honolulu. He had served a jeweler's apprenticeship before entering the navy and soon found employment in a local store as an engraver. He purchased a little bungalow in Kalihi with the savings of his naval cruise and kept out of sight in Honolulu as much as possible, wishing to avoid meeting his sweetheart until he could surprise her with a complete arrangement for housekeeping.

One day as he bent over his engraving tools his heart gave a great bound as Pearl's voice floated through the lattice partition. She was talking with the jeweler in the front of the store. Peering through the slats, Heine saw a number of jewel boxes spread out on the counter between them. The jeweler was speaking:

"Do you get all these as presents, Miss Smith?"

"Oh, of course. The sailors—they are so good to me," she laughed. "But what are they worth—pins, brooches, rings, watches and all?"

The ex-sailor sank back, stunned. A look crept into his face that his commanding officer had seen when his boatswain's mate reported "both anchors carried away, sir," as the disabled Shark wallowed with the wind toward the wandering rocks of Cape Flattery. Heine had trusted his anchors. Now he thought of his early training—of his sisters and the girls back in the Kansas home—his standards of honor for women.

The jeweler was speaking again.

"I will allow you $220."

"Will that buy a very fine watch, with diamonds?" she asked.

"A very fine watch, but not with many diamonds," he replied.

"Then I'll wait. More will come," and she walked out.

The jeweler found his engraver sitting listlessly, with idle hands, and eyes that stared into space. He suspected the vitiating influence of the tropics.

"Go out and get a cool drink," he called cheerily. "Don't let the heat get away with you!"

Heine thanked his employer and went out. He had a cooling draft and was soon back at his bench. The next day he saw a real estate man and tried to sell his bungalow, as he intended to sail from Hawaii on the Mongolia, which was due, homeward bound, in two weeks.

A few days before the China mail came in Heine was startled again by his sweetheart's voice. He heard every word as she offered the pigeon blood rubies for sale. The jeweler was in ecstasies. The stones were flawless and perfectly matched. A deal was made for a beautiful diamond incrusted watch in exchange for a number of jewels, including the rubies.

Heine had never seen the girl more beautiful. Her face, shaded by a wide hat of delicate straw and rich flowers, seemed touched with the brush of melancholy. Her neck was bare, and the point of the low V of her white gown was secured by a ruby brooch—his ruby.

"I'll take this one," she was saying, "and you must cut these words in the heart."

She stood there gazing wistfully at the watch for a long time. When she had left the store the jeweler brought it back to his engraver.

"Get this out as soon as possible," he said, depositing the watch with the slip of words to be engraved.

Heine glanced at the slip. It read "To Heine—from Pearl."

Pushing back his stool, he sprang to his feet and faced the jeweler.

"I've been judging that little Kanaka girl all this time from a wrong standpoint!" he shouted; then, hatless and coatless, he dashed from the building.

"Heat's getting in its work," the jeweler mumbled to himself. "That's the trouble with these newcomers—can't stand the heat," and he shook his head sadly, for the newcomer was an excellent engraver, and he let the gin alone.

Heine overtook the girl in front of the Young hotel, and there, utterly oblivious of the staring public, he caught her again in his arms, kissing her perfect mouth, no longer bruised, but soft as a red hibiscus blossom.

HINDENBURG STATUE.

Colossal Effigy to be Unveiled in Berlin August 28th.

The Hague, Aug. 11.—A colossal wooden statue of Hindenburg, thirty-nine feet high, is to be unveiled in Berlin on August 28th in the open square at one end of the famous Siegesallee, which is lined with statues of the Emperor's ancestors.

The monument is to be erected in accordance with a new German scheme for erecting memorials for war charities. The statue is to be "armored" with a coating of nails. Any German patriot who wishes to drive a nail into the effigy will be permitted to do so on payment of a mark. It is estimated that 1,000,000 nails will be required before the figure is fully covered.

To Free Your Skin of Hair or Fuzz

Boudoir secret(s)

No toilet table is complete without a small package of delatone, for with it hair or fuzz can be quickly banished from the skin. To remove hairs you merely mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the objectionable hairs. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes then rubbed off and the skin washed when it will be found free from hair or blemish. Be sure you get genuine delatone.

Heroic French Girl

A pretty girl of Saint Pol, near Arras, named Berthe Albet, nineteen years old, was discovered in a French uniform in the region of the firing line. She had cut her hair short and otherwise disguised herself, and she acted bravely when the military authorities sent her back to her parents. She said that her brother had been killed at Charency, and she was determined to avenge his death. She had dressed herself in one of his uniforms, and had walked twenty miles, intending to take her place in the firing-line.

The Best Treatment For Constipation

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels. To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to Constipation and digestive troubles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better. Its gripeless action always assured, and fine for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merit of Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box mentioning where you saw this advertisement. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE OVERBLOUSE IN SIMPLE FORM.

By Anabel Worthington.

7229

There is no age nor size which is not wearing the overblouse in some form these days, and it appears to be especially suited to the needs of young girls. The model herewith shown offers an excellent adaptation of this pretty style. It has as a foundation a very plain waist, with neck high and finished with a flat collar of moderate size. The sleeves form part of the blouse and may be made full length or shorter. Over this plain waist is slipped over the head the overblouse. This is quite deeply cut away at the neck and the front and back are joined by a button at each shoulder. At the waist line the material is laid in a small box pleat at each side of both front and back.

The skirt is a two gore model, and this also has the small box pleats, one at each side of front and back, on the same line as those of the waist. The normal or raised waist line may be used, but this is less important in this model than in many others because of the blouse coming down well over the belt and concealing it completely.

We see these frocks in all imaginable materials. Taffeta is one of the foremost, but light weights in serge and gabardine, gingham, linen and voile are quite as popular. The blouse is either of white or sand, or of the color of the outer dress.

The dress pattern, No. 7229, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires for skirt and overblouse 3¼ yards of 44 inch material; for waist 1¼ yards of 36 inch fabric.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age if a child.

Price 15 cents or 2 for 25c.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

CIVILIANS WITH ARMIES

Many Employed as Doctors, Nurses, Motorists and Mechanics

That the British Expeditionary Force has attached to it almost enough civilians to make quite a respectable army in itself may surprise people who remember the attitude of the War Office towards newspaper correspondents and other non-combatants. It is a fact, however, that the services of a large number of civilians are utilized in various capacities at the front. The object in employing them is to avoid diminishing the fighting capacity of the troops engaged, the theory adopted being that a soldier should only be employed as a soldier, and that all other necessary work should be left to civilians.

This civilian force, however, consists mostly of French, although there are a certain number of British civilians doing duty with the British army. The majority of these are members of the Royal Automobile Club, who are driving the cars which they have generously placed at the disposal of the staff. Other British civilians accompanying the forces are the doctors, surgeons and nurses who are assisting military medical officers in the base hospitals.

There are a considerable number of other posts for which civilians are eligible. Among them may be mentioned the handling and despatching of stores, the loading and unloading of trains, the driving of baggage wagons, and the repair of roads, etc. The other capacities in which civilians are employed with the army at the front include those of traders, surgeons, artificers, mechanics, guides, chauffeurs, interpreters, and so on. Also a proportion also find work in the postal, telegraph, remount and military departments, and so forth.

The agency service of an army in the field is a very important one and upon it in a great measure depend the health and comfort of the troops engaged. The personnel of such a department employs a considerable number of civilians. These are divided into separate squads each under the control of a medical officer and their work deals with the provision of fresh water and the destruction of refuse.

LONG WAY OF WOUNDED TO ENGLISH HOSPITAL

Marvellously Organized is Work of Medical Corps—Task Huge in Present War

The removal of the wounded from out of the firing line is one of the many problems in any war, in this the greatest of all wars, the problem is of gigantic magnitude. Still, the Royal Army Medical Corps tackle it magnificently and, in conjunction with the stretcher-bearers of the different regiments, achieve astonishingly successful results. The cost of that success is occasionally apparent to all who scan the casualty lists in the daily papers.

But despite the heroism of medical officers, orderlies, and stretcher-bearers, many men are killed after they are wounded, and incapable of assisting themselves, simply because it is a sheer impossibility immediately to remove them out of the danger zone. The reason generally for this is that when battles are terribly fierce, and casualties terribly high, the capacities of the orderlies and stretcher-bearers are taxed to the utmost limit—and beyond it! Very often the fierceness of the enemy's fire prevents a wounded man from being picked up for some considerable time.

However, when the intensity of the battle does not prevent it, the men who fall badly wounded usually receive immediate attention from their comrades. That attention, though is of necessity very slight, it consists of applying the first-aid dressing to the wound. Every soldier carries two of these dressings in his pocket.

"Unlucky" Wounded

As soon as possible the good Samaritan stretcher-bearers reach the wounded. The "luckiest" wounded are of course those nearest the stretcher-bearers' starting point. The most unfortunate wounded are those left behind when a slight retirement takes place—when, say, two or three hundred yards has been given away. Those poor fellows, if the enemy occupy the conceded ground, naturally fall into the enemy's hands. If the enemy does not occupy the ground those wounded have to remain until darkness falls to give the stretcher-bearers an opportunity of bringing them in. But, more often than not, the enemy continuously sweeps that particular patch of ground with rifle and machine gun fire during the night.

By Many Stages

When a man is picked up by the stretcher-bearers he is taken to what is called the regimental aid post. This post is anything near the field of battle which affords protection from the enemy's fire. There the medical officer attached to his particular regiment examines the patient and dresses the wound. The next journey is on an ambulance wagon generally a horse ambulance, sometimes an ordinary spring cart (without springs, perhaps) and in it the wounded man is taken to the Divisional Field Ambulance tent some two or three miles away. The wound is again dressed, and an injection is given the wounded man in order to prevent tetanus (lockjaw).

As soon as vehicles are available—he is given another journey, perhaps a mile, perhaps five miles, to, usually the nearest convenient church, school or convent. Here he gets something to eat and a very welcome rest. Here, if a immediate operation is essential for his life's sake, clever surgeons will, with the most impromptu of appliances, perform it.

The next stage of the journeyings is taken in one of the motor ambulances to one of the casualty clearing stations. These are really hospitals in every sense of the word except that, necessarily, their situation and furnishing varies according to circumstances. These clearing stations are, usually, anything from twenty to fifty miles or more, from the firing line, and it is in one of them that the wounded soldier, first comes under the care of the nursing sisters. It is also the first time since leaving England, that he has the pleasure of again sleeping in a bed. Sometimes, in the course of a few days, anything between 200 and 600 men pass through a clearing station.

Improving All the Way

From the clearing station an ambulance train conveys the wounded man a little bit nearer "Blighty" (Tommy's name for England). The ambulance train is a moving hospital. It is fitted up with every possible regard for the suffering passengers it bears as freight. There is an adequate staff of doctors, orderlies, and nursing sisters on board each train. Some of these hospital trains—those which have been specially built for the purpose since the war began are most luxuriously fitted. From the train to a base hospital, or, perhaps, if accommodation is available, straight on to the hospital-ship, the wounded warrior is then transferred. If his wound is only of a slight character the soldier, of course, is not sent to England, but kept in the base hospital until he recovers. He is then sent back to the firing line. Otherwise he goes by hospital-ship and train to the British hospitals.

According to the laws of war, any civilian who is found with arms in his possession is liable to be shot without mercy.

Newspaper Wrapped in Mystery

Strange though it sound, there exists in Brussels a daily paper "La Libre Belgique" which is never censored by the Germans. It is a very small sheet, but it contains quotations from French and English papers, such as no other paper in Belgium is permitted to publish.

The paper advertises that "A copy of this paper is daily supplied to M. von Bissing, temporary Governor of Belgium."

As a matter of fact, Governor von Bissing receives this copy regularly every day and in spite of the most strenuous efforts made by the police it has been impossible to discover who is the editor and where this paper is printed which, alone of all papers in Belgium, tells the truth."

The Retort Courteous

A German officer, who had been for some months in Ghent, where he lodged with a merchant, had remarked that his host was scrupulously polite towards him. Recently the German officer said to the merchant: "You have nothing to fear from the Germans even if Belgium has to be annexed. Our Emperor is so generous that if Brussels became a German city he would nominate King Albert burgomaster of the capital." To this the merchant replied, "It is possible. But our King is more generous still. I am certain that he would not hesitate a moment to nominate your Emperor look-keeper at Nieuport. Your Kaiser would then be able to cross the Yser when he liked."

FRENCH AVIATORS BOMBARDED GERMAN CITIES

Some Severe Trench Fighting On The Western Front

FIGHTING IS FURIOUS IN VICINITY OF VERDUN ATTACKS ARE REPULSED

Grenades and Bombs With Heavy Artillery Rock the Whole Region---Franco-Flanders Battle Front is the Scene of Severe Fighting---Crown Prince's Troops Are Hammering Hard at the French Position.

THE DEAD PILED UP IN HEAPS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 12.—(French Official Communique)—Trench after trench fighting with granades and large bombs, with heavy artillery rocking the whole region, makes the combats being waged around Verdun the most furious on the Franco-Flanders battle fronts in the past fortnight.

Official despatches this afternoon reported the repulse of two determined night attacks by the Germans near Maria Therese and Fountaine Aux Charmes.

The Crown Prince's troops are hammering hard at the French positions near Vienne Le Chateau.

Le Petre Woods, in the Pont Au Mouason region, have been the scene of desperate fighting in the last twenty-four hours, the Germans piling up heaps of dead against the French blockhouses.

In the Vosges region a German attack on the French trenches and the summit of Lingekopf was repulsed by a shower of grenades.

Bomb actions and cannonading continued throughout the night around Souchez.

GERMAN CITIES BOMBARDED.

BERLIN, via wireless, Aug. 12.—French aviators bombarded the German cities of Zweibrucken, Sankt, and Ingbert, yesterday, killing eight civilians and wounding several others.

Both cities raided by French airmen were in Bavaria. Zweibrucken is a city of about 15,000 on the Swarzbach. Sankt Ingbert lies ten miles west of Zweibrucken. Its iron foundry and munition factories probably attracted the raid by the French.

ITALIANS ROUT THE ENEMY.

ROME, Aug. 12.—A daring attack by the Bersaglieri in the full glare of Austrian searchlights Tuesday night swept the enemy from the strongly entrenched height of Monte Sei Busi, Gen. Cadorna reported to the War Office to-day.

The Bersaglieri charged without firing a shot routing the enemy with their bayonets. The position, however, was made untenable by a frightful fire from the Austrian artillery on surrounding peaks, and before dawn the Italians withdrew after first wrecking the enemy's works.

At several other points on the Carso Plateau, Austrian attacks have been repulsed.

DANISH STEAMER DESTROYED.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 12.—The Danish schooner Jason was stopped by a German submarine yesterday and destroyed by fire after the crew had been given time to take to the boats, and were later picked up by the Danish gunboat.

AUSTRIAN SUBMARINE TORPEDOED.

ROME, Aug. 12.—It is officially announced that the Austrian submarine U-12 has been torpedoed and sunk with all hands in the upper Adriatic Sea by an Italian submarine.

The announcement was made in a statement issued by the Navy Department, which added: "This morning two Austrian torpedo-boat destroyers borbarded Bari, Santo Spirito and Folfetta (Southern Italy, on teh Adriatic). One civilian was killed and seven were wounded. There was no appreciable material damage."

The U-12 was of the latest type of submarine in the Austrian navy. She was built in 1915, and had a displacement of 1,000 tons. She was 105 feet in length, 21 feet beam, and carried five torpedo tubes. Her maximum speed was 18 knots above water and 10 knots below.

TURKISH WARSHIPS SUNK.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Daily News has the following from Athens, dated Wednesday, Aug. 11: "British submarines have succeeded in entering the Black Sea and have torpedoed the Bruiser Breslau. They also torpedoed one transport and a gunboat."

A despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Athens says that the Turkish cruiser Goeben (renamed Sultan Selim after her purchase from Germany by Turkey) has been torpedoed by an allied submarine near the Bosphorus.

The despatch adds that the crew succeeded in running the cruiser aground in a narrow creek, where workmen are now building a dyke all around her to enable repairs to be made.

GERMAN PEACE OVERTURES CONFIRMED.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12.—The Novo Vremya confirms the rumours of German overtures for separate peace. It is alleged that Germany offered Russia Galicia and the Dardanelles, with a guarantee of the integrity of her frontiers, Germany stipulating for Egypt on the pretext of ceding the same to Turkey and for a free hand to deal with Russia's allies.

"This attempt testifies," says the journal, "that in spite of her brilliantly organized espionage Germany entirely fails to discount the sentiment of the Russian authorities and of the whole Russian people."

Preparing For Winter Are Battery Boys

Bombardier Luther Wondering When Others Will Arrive to Help Them

Mr and Mrs J M Luther have received the following letter from their son, Bombardier Sidney Luther, who is "somewhere in Belgium" with the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade

Belgium, July 25th, 1915

Dear Mother and Father,—Just a few lines in answer to your welcome letter. I see by the Examiner I have received that recruiting has been pretty slack in Peterborough, in fact all over Canada. It seems too bad, for if they were out here and heard the question on every man's lips, "When will they come," they would certainly jom and come out here to help us, and do their little bit. It is said the second contingent is in England I guess they must be lost, for we don't know anything about them here, but I guess they will come soon, but are we down-hearted, No, as I heard a bloke say the other day, "not arf." Thanks for the parcel you sent, that meat paste went good. Well, mother, I guess you will have to change my address for I have been promoted to bombardier now I don't know when I will get my pass to England, but I guess it will be next month if all goes well. We are preparing for winter out here now, although it is a long way off as yet, for it is a scorching hot day today. Remember me to the boys at the Fire Hall. So I will close with love to all at home.

Your loving son,

SID.

My new address is Bombardier Sidney I Luther, Reg. No. 42,15s, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, C F A, 1st Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force, Belgium.

Bombardier Luther was the first recruit from the Fire Hall.

Paving Company Has Moved In

The Warren Paving Company of Toronto commenced paving operations in the city yesterday. Like the Standard Paving Company, they were compelled to close down the work on account of the rain. The first named company will commence their contract on Hunter street. The contract calls for the construction of fifteen thousand square yards of asphaltic concrete, with three blocks of bitulithic pavement on George street. The Standard Paving Company have a similar contract, with the exception of the bitulithic paving. The latter are at present working on McDonnel street and have commenced the construction of the concrete base. McDonnel street will be paved from George street to Aylmer streets. It would appear that it is the intention of the Council to abandon the idea of laying three or four blocks of concrete pavement on McDonnel street, as an experiment. The work will necessitate the employment of a large gang of men in addition to the regular plant men brought in by the companies.

SCARCITY OF FRUIT FROM THE ORIENT

Prominent Grocers Expect Nothing From Turkey and Shipments From Other Countries May Be Slow

THE CHRISTMAS OUTLOOK

The present promise of fruits from European countries is the leanest in many years. Figs and Sultana raisins, both of which come from Turkey, have slim chances of reaching the western continent this year Dates are almost equally doubtful, although supplies are expected to be received from Hill Bros., New York, the big wholesalers of Oriental fruits But of Sultanas and figs the feeling among grocers is that no supplies will be received this year unless some radical change in the present situation occurs in the near future. These were opinions expressed by Mr. E. F. Mason and Mr T. Kinnear of Toronto, who was visiting the Peterborough branch of T. Kinnear and Co today

Valencia raisins from Spain, Patras and Filistra currants from Greece will likely be received, although they are not expected to arrive until about the middle of December. Valencias will likely be advanced from two to three cents a pound over last year's quotations and currants will probably be up a cent or two. The difficulties interfering with commerce will doubtless effect Valencia almonds Grenoble walnuts and filberts. In the same list are the fancy table raisins which form so important a part of the Christmas special trade.

Cost of Shipping.

In the existing upheaval in European territory the protection of vessels is an added cost. There is also a 7 1-2 p.c. war tax; insurance is higher; and the rate of exchange has also soared. In fact many conditions of this kind surround the import trade and tend to hamper it from many directions.

One result will be further dependence upon California fruits, which are reported to be of an average crop. Mr. Kinnear remarked that it will be possible practically to sell California seedless at the price of Valencias. His advice to the trade is caution in their purchase of dried fruit stocks.

It is evident therefore, that the Christmas pudding and cake which were not overburdened with fruit last year will be even lighter in this respect this year

Swamp Fever In Marmora

The Marmora Herald in commenting on the prevalence of swamp fever in the vicinity of Oak Lake and Cordova, says Dr Lumsden, V S, states that he has had about twenty cases in the last year The disease is a contagious one and there are dangers of it assuming serious proportions The chief government inspector was in Marmora last week and visited a couple of cases with Dr Lumsden He advised isolating the affected animals, but there is no legislation regulating the disease."

BOMBARDIER S. LUTHER.—He was recently promoted in his Battery. Writing home he says the men are anxious for more men from Canada.

Batteries Silenced

Substantial Gains Made by the Australians in the Dardanelles Heavy Fighting Continues

COMMANDER'S REPORT

LONDON, Aug 12 The Allies are working feverishly and with considerable success to open the Dardanelles, through which they hope to pour into Russia much-needed munitions of war.

Since Saturday night, when fresh British forces were landed on the Gallipoli Peninsula, there has been almost continuous fighting on the Krithia Road In these operations Australians and New Zealanders in the "Anzac" region (a name taken from the initial letters of the words "Australian - New Zealand - Army Corps") have cooperated with new forces to the north Following the successes of the troops on the Krithia road and those to the north of the "Anzac" zone, the Australians and New Zealanders took the offensive yesterday and succeeded in trebling the area formerly held by them. Their comrades to the north, who assisted them, made no further progress, however.

Simultaneously the French battleship St Louis attacked the Turkish batteries on the Asiatic side of the Straits which had been bombarding the allied positions on the peninsula, and put five guns out of commission. These actions are believed here to be preliminary to a much more ambitious attempt which has been planned by the Anglo-French commanders to sweep the Turks before them. Very heavy losses which already have been inflicted on the Turks have had a discouraging effect upon the Ottoman troops, according to reports from Greece

Sir Ian Hamilton's Report.

The official statement given out last night, read

"The latest report from Sir Ian Hamilton states that severe fighting continued yesterday in the Gallipoli Peninsula, mainly in the Anzac zone and in that to the north. The positions occupied were slightly varied in places, but the general result is that the area held at Anzac has been nearly trebled, owing chiefly to the gallantry and dash of the Australian and New Zealand corps.

While to the north no further progress has yet been made, the troops have inflicted heavy losses on the enemy and the French battleship St Louis is reported to have put out of action five out of six guns of the Asiatic batteries.

INDUSTRIAL BY-LAW WAS DEFEATED

COLLINGWOOD, Aug. 12. Lacking twenty-eight votes to make up the required two-thirds majority, the by-law to loan the Bryan Manufacturing Company $20,000 without interest was defeated here yesterday, the vote standing For 520, against 302. The business sections of the town gave big majorities for the by-law while the working men who stood to gain largely by the opening of the new works, turned it down.

The company, in addition to rebuilding its planing mill, intended to erect a large factory for the manufacture of woodenware, but now that the by-law has been defeated it will probably move to Detroit

A Keene Cry For Farm Help

There is a cry from Ontario's rural sections these days, "Come and help us." The bad weather has put farm work in such a condition that much more labour will be required to harvest the crop than was anticipated Mr. H A. Macdonell, Director of Colonization for Ontario, has received many applications for farm help, but the supply is very limited There are few volunteers for farm work this year Some, however, are being secured and are picked up rapidly at good wages All parts of the Province are requiring help, according to information received at the Director's office. There is little old country farm help coming this year, and the demands of western Canada are taking many from Ontario when they are needed at home.

SERBIA IS UNWILLING TO CEDE TERRITORY

Count Reventlow Declares That Germany Must Cut Her Way Through to Constantinople and Make the Triple Alliance a Reality

DIRECT COMMUNICATION

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Discussing the Balkan situation in the Tage Zeitung, Count Reventlow declares that Germany must cut her way through to Constantinople and make the Triple Alliance a reality.

"The demand for direct communication between Hungary and Turkey," he writes, "has found expression more and more energetically during the past few months."

The Balkan situation is featured by the London morning papers both in their news columns and editorially.

Serbia's unwillingness to cede territory claimed by Bulgaria, which will be necessary to insure active cooperation by Bulgaria on the side of the Allies, has had a discouraging effect.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—A despatch from Rome says:

"The general opinion here is that Serbia will answer the communication of the Quadruple Entente powers by offering to cede territory for a fixed sum in order to avoid responsibility for the failure of the negotiations with the Balkan States regarding their participation in the war. It is difficult to forecast the decision of Bulgaria, for Greece apparently is refusing to make any concessions to Bulgaria."

MOVEMENT TO FORM A BATTALION RECEIVED AN IMPETUS LAST NIGHT

At Meeting of Speaker's Patriotic League—Generally Believed the Government's Sanction Will Be Obtained Shortly.

MEETING AT ARMOURIES TO-NIGHT

There was a largely attended and enthusiastic meeting of the general committee of the local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League" at the Headquarters, last night Though no business of immediate public importance was transacted there was an admirable spirit of determination shown to continue the recruiting campaign with unabated vigour. To this end discussion revolved a good deal about the various hindrances to recruiting and the devising of means to lessen the obstacles, and committees were appointed and delegations named to further the objects of the League Meanwhile recruiting arrangements are going forward in a fairly satisfactory way, and in general the result of the meeting, which is to be repeated each night this week, was to keep the ball rolling and maintain the enthusiasm aroused in Peterborough and to emphasize our share in promoting the strengthening of Canada's fighting forces overseas.

The attitude expressed in the words "Let the other fellow go first," is probably the most apparent and general hindrance to recruiting The employed looks around the streets, observes the poor room attendances during work ing hours and concludes, that when more of the unemployed have answered the call they will then begin to consider throwing up their work to don the khaki And so you proceed up the wage scale The ten dollar a week man looks to the unemployed and to the six and eight dollar men to go first Coming to the fifteen dollar a week chaps they look down the scale from a distant remoteness that leaves them in a reserve class of recruits Then, coming to the pay envelope registering from $18 to $25 a week these represent the Landsturms They will call themselves out last Why sacrifice a career at least until more of the unemployed and eight dollar men have made their "minor" sacrifices And as it goes up the scale the higher the altitude the rarer the recruiting atmosphere At each step you find many fellows seriously considering enlisting but they have their eyes on the group clinging to lower steps Around the streets you will find many advocates of conscription, chaps who feel that those with careers and the big jobs since they have or potentially have the most, should be the readiest to respond to the call. Recruiting to be a success must be aimed simultaneously at every rung on this ladder, vision any it is but none the less effective

These opinions are offered from remarks heard on the street They merely indicate a condition that everyone has experienced and a problem that requires more attention up and down the ladder mostly up

The number of bandsmen enlisted has almost reached the required number Bandmaster Gliddon is about to lose some of his best men

The new infantry recruits appear to be throwing themselves unreservedly into their work

Some fellows haven't been helped to give tobacco for the men at the front

If station the infantry recruit are well up to the average and will compare very favorably with the best section that has left the city

The battery reported close to 90 men at noon today They underwent a short drill the morning and were given the rest of the day to themselves

Captain Park had forty-five men drilling in the armories this afternoon He shared the work with Sergeant Hart and Private Exburn in the section drills and took the main work of the company drills himself The men are showing remarkable aptitude and are rapidly rounding into form

Captain Park had intended to take the men over a route march today but the weather kept them indoors

WILL FORWARD AN APPEAL TO MEXICO

President Wilson Assumes Personal Control of the Situation Upon His Return to Washington—Mexican Squabble Takes Precedence

FLEET STANDS BY

Special Wire to The Examiner

WASHINGTON, Aug 12 President Wilson, who is back in Washington, was in personal control of Mexican and European international situations today.

Mexico distinctly took precedence for the time, over Europe

The President was understood to be entirely satisfied with Secretary Lansing's handling of the problem thus far

New York, Aug 12 Secretary of State Lansing assured the Latin-American diplomats who gathered here to discuss plans for the restoration of peace in Mexico that the United States in sending battleships to Vera Cruz intended only to afford protection to foreigners and a place of refuge The assembled diplomats representing Brazil, Chile, Argentina, Bolivia, Guatemala and Uruguay then discussed with Secretary Lansing details of the appeal to be issued to the Mexican people urging a peace conference of all factions, through which a provisional Government would be re-established that could be accorded formal recognition

The conference adjourned late today after having approved the appeal to the Mexican factions, which will probably be despatched today, following a conference in Washington of President Wilson and Secretary Lansing

Atlantic Fleet Stands By.

Washington, Aug 12 Order have been issued to the Atlantic fleet now at Newport R I to be prepared to sail for Mexican waters

Secretary Daniels announced that he had ordered the New Hampshire Louisiana and Connecticut to go to Southern waters and would announce their destinations later The New Hampshire and Louisiana are now 18 hours out of Newport with sealed orders, and the Connecticut is in Haytien waters

Secretary Daniels added that generally unsettled conditions in Southern waters required the presence of greater naval forces

WILL AVOID THE MEXICAN TROUBLE

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA Aug 12 It has been suggested to United States patriots that Canada take part in the Pan-American conference in Washington which is discussing the Mexican situation

It is learned here that the Canadian Government has not received any official communication on the Mexican situation The Government is watching the fate of Mexico in the United States and will avoid any trouble with Mexico

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, AUG. 12, 1915

THE LION'S WHELPS TO THE FORE.

Who can dispise the help sent by the Dominion, or not be cheered and made proud over what the whelps of the old lion are doing? We read in the despatches a few weeks ago, an official statement that the Canadians at Langemarck, "saved the situation", and to-day comes a despatch stating in the language of Sir Ian Hamilton that the area held by the Allies on the Gallipoli Peninsula was trebled "owing mainly to the gallantry and dash of the Australian and New Zealand army corps."

What young man in Peterborough with red blood in his veins doesn't burn to be in it with the other cubs of the Dominions who are winning glory and serving and saving the Empire?

THE PROBLEM OF CIVIC GOVERNMENT.

Yesterday The Examiner referred to general undesirable results in connection with our present system, or want of system, in the administration of city affairs. The want of system is doubtless the cause of the unsatisfactory and unprofitable conditions. And it is evident that these are not the fault altogether of the aldermen, or the officials. The fault is in the lack of system and coordinated effort, and any remedy of this seems impossible under our present form of city government. What is needed is a fixed and definite policy, with machinery for effectively applying it.

These things are practically impossible with almost annual change in the membership of the council. New rulers make new laws, and the policy, or apology for a policy adopted one year, may be reversed or changed the next. The officials are naturally subject to the change of rulers and policy, so that no policy of dealing with civic problems has any fair chance of trial, or of permanent adoption, if it is good; or if it is bad, of providing an effective warning.

Under these conditions, with taxes inordinately growing, with civic problems increasing in number, complexity and gravity, it is no wonder that prominent members of the City Council, who think over these things, and who feel themselves comparatively helpless in the face of increasing difficulties, talk privately of city government by commission.

Other places have tried it, or are trying it, and it seems to promise the only satisfactory solution of the problem of city government. Under it there would be virtually permanent authority; and the possibility of the adoption of a comprehensive civic policy, admitting in turn of the possibility of the adoption of a system that could be applied with immeasurable advantage over the present, inevitably hap-hazard way of doing things. The existence of our Utilities Commission is a beginning of the adoption of the principle of civic government by commission. Will any thinking citizen hazard the opinion that what is done, and, so far, well done, by the Utilities Commission would be as well done under the administration of the City Council, with the limitations that inevitably attach to the functions of a body changing in personnel and general opinion almost every year?

If we cannot bring ourselves to the adoption of civic government by commission in its entirety, we might extend it beyond the control and management of our water supply and our electrical interests. How would it do to place our street interests, sewerage, paving and general street improvement, under a commission, or add these duties to the Utilities Commission, with, of course, corresponding compensation to offset the added duties, which, with the others, would justify the commission devoting nearly its whole time and attention of the members to the work?

No man, or set of men, however capable, can satisfactorily do two things of major importance at once. One reason why city councils cannot satisfactorily grasp the complicated problems presented, is that their energies are divided. They cannot be expected to, and cannot at the same time, attend to their private business and their public duties adequately. To do this in either case is to make one or other set of duties a side issue, when each demands almost sole attention, with the result that the interests associated with both naturally suffer. No large manufacturing establishment, would be satisfied with the work of a manager, who divided his time between his regular duties and some other interest. He couldn't do satisfactory work.

It stands to reason that a complicated matter like civic government, in many departments, cannot be adequately administered by men who have double demands upon their abilities and energies.

Therefore it seems that we should contemplate the adoption of some plan or form of civic administration by which the sole time and undivided energies of a competent body of men can be made use of. We spend a great deal of money; we pay a good deal of taxes, that under existing circumstances do not yield the value desired, or possible under centralized and concentrated and, consequently, efficient application of ability and energy.

WHAT WE ARE FIGHTING FOR.

Do we all realize that we are in the fierce fight that is being waged in Europe, and are in it for two reasons, our duty and our interests?

We may not realize it, but we are fighting for our homes; for our friends; for our fathers and mothers; for our wives and sweethearts; for our children—and for ourselves. If Germany wins, we shall have all these placed in peril. All that we prize and love and enjoy will be blighted and perverted or destroyed.

The happy life, the homes, the liberties, we now enjoy without perhaps appreciating them will be changed if Germany wins. Her aim is world domination, and her domination is founded upon the pagan gospel "Might is Right." "Force" is the principle of German rule, and Belgium and the babies and women of England, know that Germany exerts her force with no light hand.

To prevent German domination, and the foul brood of evils it represents, we are fighting to-day. We must realize our danger. We must do our share.

It will not do to put our share on somebody else's shoulders.

Every man eligible for the fighting ranks is called to the colours. Everybody that can fight should fight.

We are all fighting—while the soldier enlists, those who cannot go—especially our women with their knitting and Red Cross work, men with machine guns and tobacco — are standing behind the soldier who goes.

One of the greatest obstructions to recruiting is the disposition to shoulder our duties on others.

Nobody can do your duty if you are able to do it whether you fight in the ranks or at home.

It is an honourable and a noble thing to fight, if we can fight. It is a dishonourable, cowardly and ignoble thing not to fight if we can fight.

It is a plain shirking of duty if we can do home service duty, to stand idly by and let others do our duty of helping in our own home way.

"Many hands make light work." This applies especially to fighting and other forme of help.

Our chums and friends and neighbours have gone to fight and they need help. Every man who can help should take his place beside them.

We can enter the fight with clear conscience, which cannot be clear if we shirk our duty.

On our side this war is a righteous war; and righteous men are fighting in it. Bishops lay aside the purple for the kakhi, and priests substitute the kakhi for the cassock. The Bishop of London dressed in kakhi addressed the soldiers in the camps from waggons. He is in the fight in his way and gives his reasons. He tells us what we are fighting for, and his words summarize and embrace the whole situation:

"We are fighting for the holiest things even entrusted to the care of man—the freedom of our country; the honour of our women; the right of the smaller nations to live; international honour, as the condition of the future brotherhood of nations, and the Christian principles which are to govern the future of the world, instead of the pagan Gospel that "Might is Right."

Who would not be in such a fight?

Popular Sentiment in United States Re Domestic Conditions and War Attitude

International, National and State Congresses have come like an avalanche on the Exposition, with thousands of delegates from all civilized colonies and states, including governors, statesmen, editors of political, scientific, religious and other periodicals.

Ex-Sec. Bryan was here and created a flash-in-the-pan sensation owing to his resignation, which has been outspokenly condemned by the American papers of all parties, with a unanimity unprecedented and applauded unanimously by the German-American papers, whose support by German votes in 1916 election it was aimed to win. All who have watched Bryan's machiavellian tactics since his free silver- "16 to 1" plank in his first dash for the White House, have no doubt of his motive. His grape juice stunt to catch the prohibition and women's votes, and his championing the pacifist fad, are in the same category, branding him as a selfish schemer and demagogue. By all patriotic citizens of all parties he is discredited utterly. Your readers are well aware of the pro-German element in this country among Germans, or those of that race, and political demagogues, but they may not understand the deep-rooted antipathy of the vast majority of loyal Americans to the treasonable machinations of these elements, who have proved beyond all doubt that they place Germany first and above this nation in their allegiance and fealty.

President Wilson's vacillating and temporizing policy with foreign nations, especially with Mexico, by "watchful waiting," and with Germany, has discredited this nation in the eyes of the world, who view him as a doctrinaire, or exponent of a visionary utopian peace programme, and has caused sensible citizens unspeakable mortification and disgust. The most common expression heard everywhere for the last two years in regard to foreign matters, is: "If Roosevelt had been president, the Mexico muddle would have been settled at the start and without war." Foreign nations have flouted this nation and presumed on its leader's pacificism, as Germany has clearly done, hence one hears continually "If Roosevelt had been president, the Lusitania and other outrageous tragedies would never have happened, and without war with United States."

Nevertheless, Bryan drew crowds, not only of the motley horde ever ready for any sensation, but also all sorts of advocates of quixotic so-called reformers, as "pacificists and old women of both sexes" to use a Rooseveltian phrase. He—C. J. B.—is a most versatile and accommodating orator, speaking with boisterous applause at banquets given by grimey politicians, Woman's Christian Temperance Union receptions, preaching on Sunday in a pulpit with the leading popular preacher, a degenerate Englishman on one side and a Jewish rabbi on the other.

Speaker Champ Clarke came next on the stage. He was a candidate when Woodrow Wilson was nominated, and is a possible one in 1916. He, too, was received with a storm of popular applause by the same crowds that greeted his hated enemy Bryan, so effusively cheap clap trap. With his eye on the presidency in 1916 (as both Wilson and Bryan have undoubtedly), in all his utterances on the platform and to interviewers, he steered a middle course between their policy of peace-at-any-price and on the great burning question of preparation for any emergency with Germany, Japan or Mexico, with whom war is expected sooner or later by the most astute observers.

The last to arrive was Col. T. Roosevelt, whose reception overshadowed all others in every way, in the vast numbers that rushed to welcome and hear him, estimated at 40,000, of the best citizens, who stood for two hours in a piercing breeze from the Pacific though only a fraction of a crowd could hear his stentorian voice. Supt. Moore introduced him as the one who made the Exposition possible by having made the Panama canal possible.

Gov. Johnson, as chairman, heralded him as America's greatest statesman and world leader, admired and honoured by the best citizens, irrespective of party, and hated and feared by all crooked politicians and corporation grafters more than any other man in the present generation. No resume could give any adequate idea of his address on war and peace, or his masterly, strenuous oratory. It is more difficult to give in a brief note any outline of the varied, difficult, urgent problems that confront this nation from outside, and more seriously from within itself. Your correspondent has travelled for over four years over the United States leisurely, visiting the chief cities and states, conversing with all classes familiarly and learned that all whose opinions were worth while, agreed that a revolution is inevitable — a clash between capital and labour. In four midwest states incipient rebellion has defied the federal authority in labour troubles. Another source of trouble is the treasonable German-Americans already referred to, as evidenced by the Germans in the Russian army. Owing to universal suffrage, the "hyphenated" citizens of the off-coming of Europe quickly Americanized and exploited by politicians, are the greatest menace and curse to the nation, as Macaulay showed long ago, that manhood suffrage was like a vessel with too much sail and too little ballast, and must be eventually wrecked.

The ablest interpreters of the prophetic teaching of the Bible, as well as the most acute and conservative publicists, agree that the most serious menace to the peace and welfare of the world, as well as this nation, is the mis-taken, well-meaning pacificist theorists who are advocating an impracticable and utopian programme of peace, through an utter misconception and application of the teaching of Christ. They believe that this delusion is more dangerous because so specious or plausible, than the hellish militarism of the devil-possessed Kaiser, which ought to be, and will most certainly be, destroyed in due time, and hurled back to hell, whence it came. Finally, let no one have any doubt or anxiety as to the issue of this war. The Kaiser and his doomed allies will be made to bite the dust and ground to powder, as the greatest monarch of earth was not by the allied navies and armies, but by the power that taught Nebuchadnezzar, "that the heavens do rule." (Daniel 4-26.)

WEIRD TALES OF STOCK WINNINGS

"About this time," to use the language stories of vast fortunes made by office stories of vast fortunes made by office boys, policemen, letter carriers, stenographers and domestic servants as a result of blind speculation on the proverbial "shoestring" in the stock market.

It invariably happens after a period of trading in which quotations for stocks have advanced sensationally, as they have done in the last few months in the case of certain so-called "war issues" that tidings of enormous profits reach the ears of the enterprising space writers and authors of popular fiction.

The present market has not differed in that respect from its predecessors in other boom times. In some of these cases, how ever the stories were really true while in the present case investigation has shown in the vanis about 1 per cent. truth and 99 per cent imagination.

"As a matter of fact," says a veterans in the street, "one of the sad features of the prevailing bull market is the number of persons who, in the vernacular of the race track, have been left at the post." The experienced trader was much too wary to be lured into markets like that of Bethlehem steel. Crucible steel and other issues known to be held secretly is that the owners of the majority stock could put the price where they liked. The result is that instead of an army of big winners in Wall Street, the financial district is thronged by men who unhesitatingly admit that it might have been the saddest words of tongue or pen.

Some brokers on the curb, where the strictest righteousness is not always observed in the execution of a customer's orders, have benefited to the amount of a few thousand dollars in the present boom.

Faithful stenographers in a few cases have won money by taking advantage of knowledge gained in the course of their duties, and some of the telephone boys, bearing their employers in the brokerage offices, have made a few hundred dollars.

In none of the cases has the amount won or obtained exceeded a few thousand dollars.

Notwithstanding that, however, the stories of the vast profits in the hands of "the people" interested as an outcome of the sensational advance in the quotation for Bethlehem steel stock has incited romancers. The names of the curb brokers, telephone boys and stenographers have been obtained and after their winnings had been multiplied a hundredfold their stories have been related to excite the envies of others.—New York Herald.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

CRAWFORD IS NEAR 3,000 HIT RECORD

Detroit may have her Cobb and her Bush, but she also has her Crawford. There is a Georgia peach, but of you remember anything about horticulture, you know there is a Crawford peach, too.

Cobb may make a hit. He may steal second and third and home; but most of the reports say that "Cobb came home on Crawford's drive." "What would the Tigers be without Cobb?" is the usual question in discussing the Jennings team. Well, what would the Tigers be without Crawford? If Cobb is three players himself, then the man who follows him in the batting order must be at least two.

Crawford entered major leagues in 1899 as a member of the Cincinnati National League team. He remained with the Ohio team until 1902, when he went to the Detroit Americans. Manager Hugh Jennings believes the veteran outfielder is one of the most valuable players in the game.

"There hasn't been an application for Crawford's position since I started as manager of the Tigers in 1907," he says. "I do not expect to consider any prospects for several seasons. Judging by the way Sam is going now, he will be playing baseball when the game has forgotten me."

Crawford now has 2,700 safeties to his credit and, since he is a well-preserved man, there is no reason why he should not continue as a regular player several seasons. He is one of the contenders for the 3,000-hit title of Hans Wagner. It is possible that he will reach the mark in a few seasons.

HARDEST HITTER IN LEAGUE

American League pitchers and fielders assert that Crawford hits the ball harder than any other man in the game. The veteran swings the heaviest club in the Tigers' rack with a sweeping drive of irresistible force. John Collins, Hooper, Cook, Moeller, and the other right fielders of the circuit play close to the fence when Crawford is at bat, closer than they do for any other player.

"He is the most dangerous batter I have to pitch against," says Walter Johnson. "In some of my games he has had perfect batting records. I cite it to show that pitchers have nothing mysterious on the ball when Crawford is waiting at the plate."

Bob Groome, now a Federal League pitcher, formerly with Washington, has the distinction of being the only hurler able to baffle Crawford. Cobb, Jones, Bossman, Schaefer and the other members of the famous old pennant-winning team could hit Groome. Crawford never could. It wasn't that Groome had found a flaw in the batting make up of the Tiger. There is no such thing. It was simply an unexplainable twist of fortune.

They tell many tales of the power and speed in a liner off Crawford's bat, but this is most often recounted:

Several seasons ago Crawford was taking his turn at bat during the Southern training season. O'Leary, who was then playing second base, yelled:

"Hey, Sam, give me one down here."

Crawford saw the pitch coming and he liked it. He swung his bat down with all the force in 190 pounds of bone and muscle. The ball streaked towards O'Leary, and the infielder had just time to get his glove up. The crack as the ball struck his glove was heard all over the field. O'Leary turned completely around and dropped in a heap. An instance later he got up and glanced at his glove. The ball was there. Not until then did he realize that he had made the catch. O'Leary weighed 165 pounds: the ball five ounces.

Crawford's wonderful batting — in only one championship season has he dropped under .300—is due partly to his wonderful swing and partly to his keen eyesight. Not long ago an oculist asserted that the veteran's eyesight was twice normal or as the specialists say, as six to three. Sitting 20 feet from a chart Crawford read the smallest letters easily.

"I have never seen a more perfectly conditioned man than Crawford," says Harry Tuthill, trainer of the Tigers. "He eats and sleeps regularly, and neither smokes nor drinks.

"He is a better man physically than most players 28 or 30 years old. He is always in condition. He never tries to overdo his training, preferring a slow and natural development. That is why Crawford always goes south in late January. Thus he gets a month's start, and in six weeks works off a winter's surplus flesh while other players dry themselves out in two or three weeks."

HIS PHILOSOPHY OF BASEBALL

These are a few tenets in his philosophy of the game:

"It's a great game — you know what to do with yourself after you get into it."

"Never dissipate."

"Improper food will shorten a ballball-player's career as quickly as carousing. "Never belittle the other fellow. The kid coming up is liable to be a bigger star some day than the fellow going out."

"A ballplayer cannot afford to take chances on ending his career. It is an uncertain game at best, and it will always take the best you have and ask for more. When you are through it has no place for you.

"Save your money. If you don't save the other fellows will help you spend it. That won't get you anything."

Although he is now beginning his seventeenth year in the big leagues, Crawford has been expelled from the game only three times.

Once was when he disputed a decision on strikes. Another was when Karger, a Red Sox hurler, hit him with a pitched ball.

Crawford says the greatest event in his career happened in Philadelphia in September, 1907.

The Athletics and Tigers were fighting for the American League pennant in the game that would decide the struggle. In one of the late innings of the seventeen-inning game, with runners on bases and two out, a fly ball flew to right. Crawford had his hands ready for the catch when a policeman posted him. The ball dropped and the runners crossed the plate. Umpire "Silk" O'Loughlin, with hand upraised, declared the batter out just as a mob began to take the field. O'Loughlin saw the interference and called the play as the rules stipulated. Detroit held its tie score and won the pennant in Washington a few days later.

"Connie Mack has repeatedly said that a policeman did not interfere with the catch, but Connie is wrong," Crawford says. "A policeman in front obscured by view of the ball and another ran into me."

This veteran is a force in baseball. With exception of Mathewson and Wagner no player has the same respect of both fellow players and the public. It has been said of him that he has no enemy in the game.

F. J. Navin, owner of the Detroit Club, says of him:

"Crawford has served us well. The greater part of his major league career has been spent in a Detroit uniform. He will never wear any other."

Gunning For Air Craft Is War's Sport

(By Frederick Palmer)

British Headquarters, France, Aug. 5.—A crack and a whish through the air! No sound is more familiar at the front where the artillery is never silent the sound of a shell breaking from a gun muzzle and its shrill flight toward the German line to pay them back for some shell they have sent.

Only this which did not pass put over the landscape in a long parabola or toward the German lines. It went right up into the heavens at about an angle of a skyrocket—for it was Archibald who was on the job.

Six or seven thousand feet over the British trenches there was something as big as your hand against the light blue of the Summer sky. This was the target—a German aeroplane. It wanted to see if the British were building any new trenches, if they were moving bodies of troops or of transports in some new direction, and where their batteries were in hiding.

That aviator, three miles above the earth, had many waiting guns at his command. A few signals from his wireless and they would be let loose on the target he indicated.

Wings of Intelligence.

Other features of life at the front may grow commonplace, but never the work of the planes: these wings of the army's intelligence. If they might fly as low as they pleased they might know all that was going on over the lines. They must keep up so high that through the aviator's glass a man on the road is the size of a pin-head. To descend low is as certain death as to put your head over a parapet of a trench when the enemy's trench is only a hundred yards away.

Archibald, the anti-aircraft gun, sets the deal line. He watches over it as a cat watches a mouse. The trick of sneaking up under the cover of a noonday cloud and all the other manbird tricks he knows.

A couple of seconds after that crack a tiny puff of smoke breaks about a hundred yards behind the Taube. The smoking, brass shell case is out of Archibald's steel throat and another shell case with its charge slipped in its place and started on its way before the first puff breaks. The aviator knows what is coming. He know that one means many, once he is in range.

Flies No Goal Flags.

Archibald rushes the fighting; it is the business of the Taube to sidestep. The aviator cannot hit back except through its allies, the German batteries, on the earth. But all that the aviator can see is mottled landscape. From his side Archibald flies no goal flags.

Archibald's propensities are entirely peripatetic. He is the vagabond of the army lines. Locate him—and he is gone. He is the only gun which keeps regular hours like a Christian gentleman. All the others fire at any hour, night or day. Aeroplanes do not go up at night; and when no aeroplanes are up Archibald has no interest in the war.

Why he was named Archibald nobody knows. As his full name is Archibald, the Archer, possibly it comes from some association with the idea of archery.

Has His Private Car.

Archibald, who is quite the swellest thing in the army, has his own private car, built especially for him. While the cavalary horses back of the lines grew sleek from inaction the aeroplanes have taken their places. All the romances and risk of scouting are theirs. If a British aviator gets a day's leave, he does not take a train and steamer. He rises from the aviation grounds about half-past four and is at home in England for dinner and return after lunch the next day. All the action the cavalry see is when they go into the trenches as infantry.

Such of the cavalry's former part as the planes do not play Archibald plays. He keeps off the enemy's scouts. Do you see teamwork, spirit of corps and smartness in this theatre of France, where all the old glamour of war is lacking? You will find it in the attendants of Archibald.

Watch them there, every man knowing his part as they send their shells after the Taube. There isn't enough waste motion among the lot to tip over the rangefinder of the telescopes.

Have a Real Target.

The sport of war is not dead for Archibald. Here you see your target which is so rare these days when British infantrymen have stormed and taken trenches without ever seeing a German—and the target is a bird, a man-bird. Puffs of smoke with bursting hearts of death are clustered around the Taube. They hang where they broke in the still air. One follows another in quick succession for more than one Archibald is firing before your entranced eyes.

Looking through the sight it seems easy to hit a plane. But here's the difficulty. It takes two seconds, say, for the shell to travel to the range of the plane. The gunner must wait for its burst before he can spot his shot. Ninety miles an hour is a mile and a half a minute, a hundred yards the plane has travelled from the time the shell left the gun muzzle till it burst. That ought to have got him: the burst was right under him. No! He rises. Surely that one got him, anyway. The puff is right in front of the Taube, partly hiding in from view. You see the plane tremble as if struck by a violent gust of wind.

"Close!" Within thirty or forty yards, the telescope says. But you must hit the man or the machine in a vital spot in order to bring down your bird.

It is amazing how much shell fire an aeroplane can stand. Aviators are accustomed to the whizz of shell fragments and bullets and to have their planes punctured and ripped. Though their engines are put out of commission, and frequently though, wounded, they are able to volplane back to the cover of their own lines.

TOMMY IS AT HOME IN WAR EVERY WHERE

Jungles and Barbed Wire Cannot Daunt—Narratives of Strange Fighting—When Rhinos Charge

With all eyes fixed on the main campaign against the Germans in western Europe it is hard for Britishers to remember that many minor campaigns of extraordinary difficulty are being fought in many parts of the world. Besides facing machine guns, poison shells and liquid fire British pluck is constantly finding new strange foes, dangers and difficulties to overcome, as many letters show more clearly than official despatches concerning out-of-the-way exploits.

In the dense tropical jungles of western Africa fighting between Germans and British with blacks enlisted on both sides goes on night and day. Little is heard of it because of the greater campaigns on the continent. Lieutenant F. R. Jerrim, of the Third Nigeria Regiment, on active service in the German Cameroons, describes his experience thus in a letter home. "I was in Lagos when a corps of white volunteers were being formed. I joined and is due course began to impart instruction in machine gunnery to a dense, yet interested section of Hausas. My old volunteer training and a knowledge of the Hausa tongue made me a lieutenant of the West African Frontier Force. We are getting quite accustomed to this ghostly bush fighting, popping off at one another at about thirty yards' range, and only occasionally seeing one another. Every four days each of us takes thirty men out on patrol, and so far I have had better luck than anyone in finding supplies of Germans and smiting them mildly. There is no sport like patrolling here, where you never know whether you are hunter or hunted until the show opens."

No Guerilla Work Here

Contrast this with the experience of a Londoner writing home from Flanders. "The 23rd London Regiment, after faithfully and steadily doing trench duty for about two months, were ordered to charge. They did so coolly and effectively. They succeeded in taking three lines of trenches by brilliant dash, but they were shelled out of two lines by terrible enfilade shelling, which caused more casualties than the charge, many men being blown to pieces. They hung on till they were relieved under terrible machine gun and artillery fire. In one instance forty-seven men held a trench against overwhelming odds. the Germans threw petrol bombs, and some were blinded and roamed about without sight between the lines. The whole was a terrible and unnerving sight to civilian soldiers, but the boys did fine."

The British troops in East Africa have to fight other enemies besides Germans. Private E. H. Burt writes home a description of a charge by rhinoceroses in bush so thick that the men could only advance single file and thought it remarkable good going to average a mile an hour. He says: "We had just crossed a dry river and were toiling up the banks of the slope, all more asleep than awake, when we heard a terrible noise and scamper coming from our right rear. In turning about I was just able to see a rhino rush past the man. It was pitch dark and it was as much as one could do to see the second man ahead. He sent the gun carriers flying, the gun in one direction and the pod in another. All the rest of the carriers dropped their loads. It was a nice mix-up; ammunition boxes were lying everywhere. We were just gathering ourselves and belongings together, when we heard a terrific snort and a crashing of bush. Everyone dropped loads and sprang to cover, which of course, was of no use at all. This time Mr. Rhino passed in front of two or three men ahead of me, and going in the same direction as the previous one. This charge meant another mix-up of gear. Again he charged and chaos reigned supreme. It was laughable, but it took twenty minutes for us to get ready to go fearfully on our route."

Birds and Bullets Song

But nature takes up a less terrifying role in the European war. "Isn't it marvellous how nature goes on in the ordinary way!" writes Trooper J. C. Cox, in a letter home to his parents. He is describing how one night they tried to carry up wire to put in front of a newly-dug trench. "They," (the Germans) he proceeds "heard us, or saw us, before we could do a stroke of work. They opened fire, and we lay flat down while the bullets whizzed over our backs—simply a stream of lead from their Maxim guns. While I was lying flat on the ground, I saw a cat catch and kill a mouse. While the shells were crashing over us a wood pigeon cooed in the branches of a tree above us, while just behind, in a dug-out, was a nest with four young birds. A few yards behind that pigeon one of our dear boys was killed and buried."

Movement To Form Battalion

A trip to Chemong and back, with luncheon on the lake shore, is a probability within the next few days.

And in the meantime it is possible that instructions may be received from Kingston for the men to join the 59th or 77th Battalions.

It is mentioned as a possibility. There has been nothing said about it at the armouries, but it is over a week since the big meeting, and there has been no conclusive statement from the Militia Department yet.

The following communication exemplifies the confidence in their project that the Speakers' Patriotic League entertain:

The Speakers' Patriotic League, in communication with Kingston, over the telephone, this morning, were assured that everything was being done to have a battalion organized at Peterborough to cover this county and city, and it is practically assured that such will be the case. All recruits for the infantry will be retained here and will be attached to the Peterborough Battalion.

It is now up to the young men of the County and City to flock to the recruiting stations to rapidly fill this battalion.

Arrangements will be made immediately with all the towns and villages to begin recruiting, also representative men in the County will be asked to join in with the organization already established to see that outside districts provide their share.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

Termonde.

To understand the depositions describing what happened at Termonde it is necessary to remember that the German army occupied the town on two occasions, the first, from Friday, September 4th, to Sunday, September 6th, and again later in the month, about the 16th. The civilians had delivered up their arms two weeks before the arrival of the Germans.

Early in the month, probably about the 4th, a witness saw two civilians murdered by Uhlans. Another witness their dead bodies which remained in the street ten days. Two hundred civilians were utilized as a screen by the German troops about this date. On the 5th the town was partially burnt. One witness was taken prisoner in the street by some German soldiers together with several other civilians. At about 12 o'clock some of the tallest and strongest men amongst the prisoners were picked out to go round the streets with paraffin. Three or four carts containing paraffin tanks were brought up, and a syringe was used to put paraffin on to the houses, which were then fired. The process of destruction began with the houses of rich people, and afterwards the houses of the poorer classes were treated in the same manner. German soldiers had previously told this witness that if the Burgomaster of Termonde, who was out of town, did not return by 12 o'clock that day the town would be set on fire. The firing of the town was in consequence of his failure to return. The prisoners were afterwards taken to a factory and searched for weapons. They were subsequently provided with passports enabling them to go anywhere in the town, but not outside. The witness in question managed to effect his escape by swimming across the river. Another witness describes how the tower of the Church of Termonde St. Gilles was utilized by the German soldiers for offensive purposes. They had in fact mounted a machine gun there. This witness was subsequently taken prisoner in a cellar in Termonde, in which he had taken refuge with other people. All the men were taken from the cellar and the women left behind. About seventy prisoners in all were taken; one, a brewer, who could not walk enough, was wounded with a bayonet. He fell down and was compelled to get up and follow the soldiers. The prisoners had to hold up their hands, and if they dropped their hands they were struck on the back with the butt ends of rifles. They were taken to Lebbeke, where there were in all 300 prisoners, and they were locked up in the Church for three days and with scarcely any food.

A witness living at Baesrode was taken prisoner with 250 others, and kept all night in a field. The prisoners were released on the following morning. This witness saw three corpses of civilians, and says that the Germans on Sunday, the 6th, plundered and destroyed the houses of those who had fled. The Germans left on the following day, taking about thirty men with them, one man of seventy years of age.

Later in the month civilians were again used as screens, and there is evidence of other acts of outrage.

Alost.

Alost was the scene of fighting between the Belgian and German armies during the whole of the latter part of the month of September. In connection with the fighting numerous cruelties appear to have been perpetrated by the German troops.

On Saturday, the 11th September, a weaver was bayoneted in the street. Another civilian was shot dead at his door on the same night. On the following day the witness was taken prisoner together with thirty others. The money of the prisoners was confiscated, and they were subsequently used as a screen for the German troops, who were at that moment engaged in a conflict with the Belgian army in the town itself. The Germans burnt a number of houses at this time. Corpses of 14 civilians were seen in the streets on this occasion.

A well educated witness, who visited the Western Hospital shortly after this date, saw the dead bodies of a number of civilians belonging to Alost, and other civilians, wounded. One of these stated that he took refuge in the house of his sister-in-law, that the Germans dragged the people out of the house, which was on fire, seized him, threw him on the ground, and hit him on the head with the butt end of a rifle, and ran him through the thigh with a bayonet. They then placed him with 17 or 18 others in front of the German troops, threatening them with revolvers. They said that they were going to make the people of Alost pay for the losses sustained by the Germans. At this hospital was an old woman of eighty, completely transfixed by a bayonet.

Other crimes on non-combatants, at Alost belong to the end of the month of September. Many witnesses speak to the murder of harmless civilians. In Binnenstraat the Germans broke open the windows of the houses and threw fluid inside, and the houses burst into flames. Some of the inhabitants were burnt to death.

The civilians were utilised on Saturday, the 26th September, as a screen. During their retreat the Germans fired twelve houses in Rue des Trois Clefs, and three civilians, whose names are given, were shot dead in that street after the firing of the houses. On the following day a heap of nine dead civilians were lying in the Rue de l'Argent.

Similar outrages occurred at Erpe, but they were prisoners taken from Alost, and not dwellers in that village. Civilians were apparently used as a screen at Erpe, a village a few miles from Alost. The village was deliberately burnt. The houses were plundered and some civilians were

This disregard for lives of civilians is strikingly shown in extracts from German soldiers' diaries, of which the following are representative examples. Barthel, who was a sergeant and standard bearer of the 2nd Company of the 1st Guards Regiment on foot, and who during the campaign received the iron cross, says, under date 10th August, 1914: "A transport of 300 Belgians came through Duisburg in the morning. Of these 80, including the Ober-burgomaster, were shot, according to martial law." Mathern, of the 4th Company Jagers, No. 11, from Marburg, states that at a village between Birnal and Dinant on Sunday, Aug. 23rd, the Pioneers and Infantry Regiment 178, were fired upon by the inhabitants. He gives no particulars beyond this. He continues: "About 200 inhabitants were shot and the village was burnt. Artillery is continuously shooting—the village lies in a large ravine. Just now, 6 o'clock in the afternoon, the crossing of the Meuse begins near Dinant. All villages, chateaux and houses are burnt down during the night. It is a beautiful sight to see the fires all round us in the distance."

Bombardier Wetzel of the 2nd Mounted Battery, 1st Kurhessian Field Artillery Regiment, No. 11, records an incident which happened in French territory near Lille on the 11th of October: "We had no fight, but we caught about 20 men and shot them." By this time killing men in a fight would seem to have passed into a habit.

Diary No. 32 gives an accurate picture of what took place in Louvain. "What a sad scene—all the houses surrounding the railway station completely destroyed. Only some foundation wall still standing. On the station square captured guns. At the end of the main street there is the Council Hall, which had been completely preserved, with all its beautiful turrets, a sharp contrast; 180 inhabitants are stated to have been shot after they had dug their own graves."

The last and most entry is that contained in diary No. 19. This is a blue book inter-leaved with blotting paper, and contains no name and address; there is, however, one circumstance which makes it possible to speak with certainty as to the regiment of the writer. He gives the names of First Lieutenant von Oppen, Count Eulenburg, Captain von Roeder, First Lieutenant von Back and Polach, Second Lieutenant Count Hardenburg, and Lieutenant Engelbrecht. A perusal of the Prussian Army list of June, 1914, shows that all these officers, with the exception of Lieutenant Englebrecht, belonged to the first Regiment of Foot Guards. On the 24th August, 1914, the writer was in Ermeton. The exact translation of the extract, grim in its brevity, is as follows: "24.8.14. We took about 1,000 prisoners; at least 500 were shot. The village was burnt because the inhabitants had also shot. Two civilians were shot at once."

Voice of The People

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—As I am just in and fearing that I may not be on hand in time to make the suggestion at a meeting of the local Commercial Travellers' Association, I take this opportunity of drawing attention to the fact that Commercial Travellers' Associations in other places have contributed a machine gun to Canadian soldiers, and I would like to see our local Association take the matter up, and I am sure it would be received enthusiastically by all the members.

Thanking you for your space, and hoping to hear of our local Association doing something in this important matter, I am,

Yours truly,

Peterborough Commercial Traveller

To whom it may concern:

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own my native land.

On Saturday evening the 7th, time seemed hanging weary on my hand as parading Charlotte and George street between the hours of 7 and 9 p.m. my thoughts carried me across the angry western ocean to the bloody fields of Flanders, where one hundred years ago brave sons of noble mothers shed their hearts blood "to give us the freedom we now enjoy. And how we guard that freedom. The scene in a sense is little changed to-day. They are the same fields, the same race of people, the cause the same, freedom or starving. The all comes from Flanders for help. Over the whole length and breadth of the great and glorious British Empire we can hear it ringing in our ears, help. It is wafted along with every wind that blows, every ripple of the sea carries it on its bosom to the shore; on the crest of the mighty, mountainous waves it is borne along, help. All honour to that gallant little band who hath heard and answered the call, who hath left their kith and kin, all that is near and dear to them, to beard the lion in his den, that you and I may still enjoy the freedom won by their forefathers and ours. With these thoughts running through my mind at the above mentioned time and date, I set myself the task of counting and marking down every young man with khaki or with the band on his arm, showing that he for one had heard the call for freedom's cause and answered it. Their number came to 92 all told. Again I say, all honour to that gallant 92. At the same time I set to counting and marking down what seemed to me the eligible, able-bodied men who hear the cry for help from their companions but heed it not. Their number, sorry to say, was greater than the number of the beast in Revelations. Wending my way home in disgust, I said to myself, woe, woe to Canada if such is the spirit of the sons she now rears. Better, ye, better by far that the Kaiser would come with his murdering hosts and wipe out forever a degenerate race of double-dyed, white livered cowards. Strong language, yes, but truth. Young woman, listen! As the tales of love flow from the lips of your sweetheart, if he has not the sign of freedom on his apparel, believe him not. Tell him if he cares for you he must help to retain your freedom, otherwise he is a coward. I ask, is there a young man who would go through this world with the name of coward stamped on his forehead? Were he a son of mine, much rather would I see him 'neath the clods of the valley. As loyal Canadians we hope, we trust, we pray that the Allies will be victorious, and when the day does come when the remnant of that gallant band arrives home again, eligible, able-bodied young man, how can you go to the station and wave your hands and sing, "See the Conquering Heroes Come." The conquering heroes, as heroes they most assuredly are, will turn from you in disregard and say, depart from us, we know you not; curse ye young man, curse ye, you came not out to help the Lord against the mighty. In conclusion I borrow some words from an old Scotch war song:

Who would be a traitor knave?
Who could fill a coward's grave?
Who sae base as be a slave?
Let him turn and flee.

By oppresions, woes and pains,
By our boys in servile chains,
We will drain our dearest veins,
But we must be free.

—SCOTTIE.

THE RECRUIT'S PAY

Schedule of Allowance From the Government---Canadian Soldier Exceptionally Well Paid---Separation Allowance For Wives and Widowed Mothers---Important Consideration For Those Intending to Enlist.

Naturally the recruit asks as to the pay. The Canadian soldier stands alone in the world in the extent of the pay that is made for him. In no other country does the amount even approach that given to the Canadian. We think the man from Canada, who is going into the trenches can hardly be given an amount of pay to equal his responsibility and the risk he takes. Of course the matter of money is not a determining factor at any time, but there are circumstances in which it is a substantial solace. So the pay stands.

If he is a single man he receives $1.85 per day. Of this amount $1.00 is the private's pay, 10 cents as a field allowance, and 85 cents is a sustenance allowance, to pay his board. He is paid for thirty days in the month, and this includes Sundays. When he leaves the city he may assign, or make over to relatives, if he so wish, a proportion of his pay and that amount will be held by the department and regularly sent to his relatives, or to those to whom he so directs. When on service he gets $1.10 per day, only.

For the Married Man.

If a married man his status is as follows: He receives while in the city $1.85 per day. This amounts to about $55.00 per month, and payment is made twice per month. On leaving home, which means if he is sent to any place outside the city, his pay is then $1.10 per day. But his wife at once comes into the receipt once each month of what is called the Separation Allowance, of $20.00 per month. The wives of all married privates receive the same amount. In addition the Department will hold from the soldier's pay as much as $15.00 per month and send it to the wife. It is assumed that being found in his board and clothing and other necessary furnishings the married soldier can devote at least half of his pay to the family, whether he wishes to do so or not, and this is a wise provision, for there are many husbands and wives who have not and will not live in conjunal harmony. More's the pity, but it is a fact. Many—too many—cases of marital resentment have come to light.

If there are not children, or if there are the amount of pay made to the soldier is the same, and in order to overcome this apparent inequality the Canadian Patriotic Fund steps in. And it will continue to dispense its practical benefits so long as its money holds out.

To the wife, if she is alone, that is if there be no children, is made an allowance of $10.00 per month. The amounts allowed in the cases of children are differing, and this may perhaps be expressed in the statements below:

If there be two children—
From 10 to 15 years, each, $7.50.
From 5 to 9 years, each, $4.50.
Under 5 years, each, $3.00.

If there be three children, and more—
From 10 to 15 years, each, $6.00.
From 5 to 9 years, each, $3.00.
Under 5 years, $2.00.

As an example we will work out the amount based on a family of a mother and four children of different ages:

Mother, per month	$10.00
One child of 13	6.00
One child of 10	6.00
One child of 5	3.00
One child of 2	2.00
	$27.00

This shows a total of $27.00. But the maximum allowance permitted under the Fund is $25.00. So the amount is reduced by two dollars, to bring it within the schedule.

Such, in brief is the scale of allowance. There are certain intricate cases which come up involving considerations outside the plain rules of the fund and each is dealt with on its merits or facts. It is the aim of the Committee, following instructions from the Head Office, and in justice to the contributors, to see that the Fund is not dissipated, but wisely administered so as to bring to the recipients the greatest possible amount of assistance where it is most needed, and not to issue the Fund on a hard and fast scale. That may never be done. It is always held in view that the Fund was devised and contributed as a gift from the people "for the assistance of the wives and dependent relatives of the soldiers in service." There are cases where the Committee deems that assistance is not really necessary, and in such no allowance is made. If the wife or family are comfortable, in the sense that they are little, or anything worse off by the absence of the soldier, then the assistance is made small in amount or entirely discontinued. The giving out of the fund is public trust.

The Widowed Mother.

What of the status of the widowed mother whose boy has joined the ranks, and all honour to the mothers of the land, there are many such. Her sole support is gone. If any case deserve consideration it is such. Plainly, the soldier is not a married man though he may have been carrying the responsibilities of one in the scheme of the family life at home.

The mother is at once made Separation Allowance of $20.00 per month. Assigned, or held, pay of soldier, $15.00. Patriotic Fund allowance, $10. If children, (brothers or sisters of the soldier who is at the front) then an allowance just the same as in the case of a wife. So that we have it as it should be, that often the mother who has consented to her son enlisting, finds herself in receipt of a larger income than if her boy had stayed at home. In fact, in the general scheme, it is a rare case where the private who enlists will not leave his family in comfortable circumstances so far as the amount of income is concerned as much so as if he were with them.

Intangible Recognition.

What has been written above is from a purely business or financial point of view. There is the larger side of gratitude, of recognition, of sacrifice that may not be expressed in terms of dollars and cents. That made by a family that sends four sons to the front is broadly noble; of a father and five boys in the trenches and a mother and girl at home. And there are thousands of others. A sense of a duty to one's country is the reward that must be lacking where so many hang back. Of course all cannot go. We are not living in Germany or we should be ordered to march. The daily avocations of life in any community must be kept up. But there are those in ample number to do it if those physically fit will rally to the flag. In scores of places and occupations men have doubled up that the absence of the man off the staff shall not be missed. Catch hold and lift. We have never reached as yet in Canada where each man has been compelled to pull his own weight. Some one other is taking a share of the load.

First Mass In Ontario

Celebrated by Rev. Father LeCaron Three Hundred Years Ago—Anniversary Celebrated To-day

On August 12, 1615, the first mass of the Roman Catholic Church was celebrated in Ontario, in the parish of Lafontaine, Penetanguishene, near Orillia. The mass was celebrated by the Rev. Father Le Caron, of the Recollect order, and with the celebrant were the great Champlain, his interpreter, Etienne Brule, and 13 French soldiers. On August 12th the 300 anniversary will be commemorated by the celebration of mass in the open air, his Grace Archbishop McNeil officiating. The altar for the sacrifice of the mass on this occasion will be erected on the exact spot the first one stood when the first mass was celebrated 300 years ago.

Of Local Nature.

Owing to the war the event will be of a local nature. Otherwise it would have been made the occasion of a general pilgrimage to the ancient and sacred spot. Right Rev. Mgr. Kidd president of St. Augustine's Seminary who was the pastor of the parish of Lafontaine, will have charge of the arrangements for the celebration.

It will assist the imagination to recall what was happening three hundred years ago, when Champlain was exploring the country which is now the garden and pride of Canada. King James I. was on the throne of England. Shakespeare died in 1616, a year after Champlain attended mass in the wood of Ontario. About that time Oliver Cromwell was born. Five years later the Puritan Fathers landed from the Mayflower, and held the first Congregational service in the New World. Not many years before the first colony was founded in Virginia by Sir Walter Raleigh, under Queen Elizabeth.

CHRIST ALONE CAN GIVE US VICTORY OVER DEATH

God Forgives and Forgets Our Sins Said Evangelist Ranton —The Saving Power of the Resurrection

Evangelist A. H. Ranton, of Toronto, has been the speaker at the big Hunter street Tabernacle for the past two nights. Large crowds greeted him at both services, among them many old friends who had known Mr. Ranton when he was in Peterborough seventeen years ago, at which time he held very successful revivals on George street and Charlotte street churches. There were several who grasped the evangelist's hands and declared that they were converted in the meetings of those days.

On Tuesday night Evangelist Ranton asked those who were Christians to tell how they were converted, either in revivals or otherwise. All but a few of those who arose stated that they had been converted in revival meetings, some as long ago as sixty-five years. Others but a few days ago in the present revival.

The Evangelist spoke on "the three great reasons for being a Christian" and "three great facts concerning redemption." He said, "I go to Christ because Christ alone can save me from my sins. I am talking to people who believe in the fact of sin. Sin blackens the heart, sin darkens the mind, sin scars the conscience. No one, not even Pastor Russell nor even Sister Eddy can blot out our sins. Christ alone can do that. When God forgives he also forgets and the dirtiest scamp out of Hell is the person who casts up to another a matter which God has forgiven and forgotten. I am going to Christ because Christ alone can satisfy my soul's deepest needs. Man's demands for Christ arise out of the moral constitution of man. I am coming to Christ because He alone can give me victory over my last great enemy death."

In speaking from the text in Heb. 7:25 he stated that there were three great facts concerning Redemption. Jesus is able to save me from the guilt of my sins through the merits of His death on the cross. Sin cannot be settled anywhere only at the cross. Over against the fact of the guilt of sin is pardon. Over against the fact of the power of sin is deliverance. Over against the stain of sin is cleansing through the blood of Jesus Christ. There isn't a demon on earth or a devil in hell that can place upon me a finger of condemnation when Jesus Christ gives pardon.

Jesus Christ is able to save me from the power of sin through His resurrection. Some people are not willing to admit the power of sin. Thank God you can be delivered from the power of sin as well as the guilt of sin.

Jesus Christ is able to save us unto the end through His intercession for us. I am out of hell and you are out of hell because Jesus Christ died, rose and intercedes for us.

Evangelist Sharpe will speak to night at eight o'clock.

Nephew of Mrs. W. G. Menzies Drowned

Toronto Globe Stereotyper Loses His Life Near Long Branch

TORONTO, Aug. 12.—While bathing in the lake near the mouth of Etobicoke River, near Long Branch, at noon yesterday, Frole M. Moyse, aged 25 years, of 192 Grace street, went beyond his depth and was drowned. The young man was one of a party of campers at the summer colony at the mouth of the Etobicoke River. With a number of others he went swimming at about 12 o'clock. While wading out he got beyond his depth and was drowned before assistance could be rendered. Captain Chapman and the crew of the Life-Saving Station were called, and recovered the body soon after arriving. Dr. Forbes Godfrey, M.P.P., of Mimico, was also summoned, and he worked over the body for an hour with the pulmotor, but it was of no avail.

Moyse was employed as a stereotyper at the Globe. By a strange coincidence his 25th birthday was yesterday.

The drowning yesterday is the second that has occurred at the mouth of the Etobicoke River within the last two months. Only a few weeks ago two boys were drowned while out sailing just at the mouth of the river. Dr. Godfrey, who has been summoned to most of the drownings along the lake shore this summer, is strongly urging the need of a life-saving station at the mouth of the Humber River. He points out that by far the greater number of fatalities of this nature occur from Sunnyside westward along the lake shore, and that the station should consequently be moved to the Humber or another one established there.

Mr. Moyse is a nephew of Mrs. Edward Carr, 353 Reid street, and a relative of Mrs. W. G. Menzies. On Toronto Civic Holiday a brother of the deceased young man spent the day with relatives here.

Why Churchill Left Admiralty

One of the important Changes in the British Government Since the Outbreak of War

HIS ABSENCE FELT

(Copyright by T. P. O'Connor.)

Since the war began the changes in the positions of the prominent figures in the Government have been more frequent than in normal times. Premier Asquith has seemed to be in the throngs of the sea and then again on the mounting waves. Lloyd George has been for a space the popular hero and then again, owing to indiscreet friends, has been submerged under an asphyxiating gas of intrigue. Grey was pointed to by some sensational organs as the man who ought to go, and then when he returned to the House of Commons after a brief illness he received a royal reception.

But the man whose future has been rendered most uncertain by those stirring times is Winston Churchill.

Winston bears himself bravely; speaks whenever occasion arises with his usual dazzling brilliancy, and altogether bears himself well; but all the same it is no secret that he feels bitterly his enforced separation from the navy.

The Navy His Ambition.

It was the darling ambition of his life to be in control of England's greatest weapon. Though he has been a politician by instinct and hereditary, he is also a soldier by birth, and many a time has tasted the greatest zest of life in very tight places in the battlefield; as in the Lancers' charge at Omdurman and the armoured train in South Africa, and he has sung Paeans afterwards over the joy of life he felt on those hours when but a hair's breadth stood between himself and death.

The dare-devil spirit which sought rather than avoided deadly peril represents the real, the inner Churchill. He is always in search of such adventure and such emotion, and he carries that spirit into even the House of Commons, where usually his speeches are the signals for outbursts of vehement feeling on all sides.

When he got at last to the Admiralty he began to work on it with all the fierce eagerness of his nature. Curiously enough, this young man who is a man of letters by instinct is not only a man of action as well but has always taken a great interest in machinery. So when he got to the head of the fleet he went into every ship, dived in the submarines, mounted in the aeroplane until he was persuaded by his wife, who was the beautiful Miss Hozier, into a promise not to risk his neck in a flight for some time.

There was a story at the time that Churchill was so intoxicated with the sense of controlling the fighting forces of his country that he desired to add the War Office to the Admiralty. The story goes that one day in discussion with Asquith who at the time it was immediately after the military revolt in the Curragh—was acting as War Minister, the idea arose of combining the two offices. It was suggested by Asquith and served with a smile, "Winston, I shall by call undertake both offices!" Which, of course, was not what Winston wanted.

I don't think the story is true—it gives one an idea of what people think of Churchill's ambitions.

Why He Left Admiralty.

Why did Churchill leave the Admiralty? How he came to get there is not so certain as how he came to leave. Fisher had resigned and Churchill ordered the dismissal of the four Fisher supporters. Fisher

Hydro-Electric Meeting in Havelock

Future Outlook of Havelock Alone Does Not Warrant Installation of System

HAVELOCK, Aug. 12.—Mr. T. F. Espenschied, assistant engineer of the Hydro Electric Power Commission was in town and met the local committee of citizens appointed to look into the matter of Hydro power for the village.

Mr. Espenschied explained in detail many points which the committee were in ignorance of and frankly told them that from a local standpoint alone, the future outlook in Havelock would hardly warrant the village in installing a Hydro system, but that if the Ontario Rock Co. and the C.P.R. could be procured as customers that the proposition would be entirely feasible and practicable.

The meeting adjourned after a resolution had been passed authorizing the Hydro to take the matter up with the C.P.R. and the Rock Co. and to quote them prices that should close a contract with them.

THEY WENT TO HARVEST REMAINED TO RECRUIT

How 30 Men Sent Out From Kingston to Help With Crops Got Men

Barriefield War Camp, Aug. 12. — When Lt.-Col. Dawson allowed nearly 30 men of the 59th Battalion to leave camp and go to some centre in Ontario to help in the work of harvesting, he impressed upon them the necessity for recruiting at the expiration of their privilege, being good while they were away, and to try and secure recruits for the 59th Battalion among young men in the country. The men were told to consider themselves recruiting agents for the 59th, and if they secured any young men, all they had to do was to write to Lt.-Col. Dawson and he would furnish tran-portation to camp. The men have only gone a little over a week, and already their recruiting efforts are beginning to bear substantial results. Over 20 recruits have been secured as a direct result of the work of the men who went away harvesting, and there are good prospects for a great many more. If all other officers who allow their men to go and help gather in the golden harvest would do as the officer commanding the 59th Battalion is doing, there would be a big boom in recruiting. Now here is a lesson to recruiting organizations—"Here are men without oratorical flights or rhetorical flourishes, getting young men from the country to put on the uniform and sending them into camp. Publicity and personal touch will reach the young Canadian and make him see his duty.

COAL SHORTAGE IS ANTICIPATED

United States May Levy an Export Duty—Mines Are Working Full Time

Rumours from the region of Pennsylvania are preparing Canada for a increase in the price of her winter coal. To-day it is still $7.50 a ton, but word has been received that the Pennsylvania Railroad is storing thousands of tons at convenient points along the system in anticipation of a shortage.

"We are just the middlemen in Canada for the Americans," explained a prominent coal merchant. "We do not want to increase the price but must follow the United States market. They are talking down there of an export duty on coal in case France and Switzerland should call on the United States for their winter supply. For our coal we are at the mercy of the United States."

Last season coal advanced on Aug. 15, though the summer prices usually hold good until September 1st. The reasons given by the Pennsylvania mine owners for the threatened shortage are that many of the miners have gone to the front, and also that the dealers are now making money in the manufacture of war munitions, which creates a large demand for coal. For the first time in several years the miners are working full time.

A number of the local coal merchants are out of the city. It is understood they are considering the situation with a view of alleviating the prospective difficulty.

Mr. Jos. Walsh of Margaret avenue, has received word from his son, Dr. Stanley Walsh of the Varsity Hospital corps that he has been sent to the Dardanelles where, it is expected, he has arrived by this time.

British and German Cruiser Sunk in the North Sea

H.M.S. Ramsey and German Cruiser Meteor Sent to the Bottom With Loss of Five British Officers —The German Version of the Skirmish

London, August 12. The British warship Ramsey has been sunk in the North Sea by the German steamer Meteor, it was officially announced last night. The Meteor, as she was being chased by British vessels, was blown up by her commander, the statement adds. The text of the statement follows:

"H.M.S. Ramsay, Lt. S. Raby, R. N.R., a small armed patrol vessel, was sunk by the German armed fleet auxiliary steamer Meteor on the 8th of August in the North Sea. Four officers and 39 men were saved. The Meteor subsequently sighted a squadron of British cruisers, and her commanding officer, realizing that escape was impossible, ordered the crew to abandon the ship and then blew her up."

The Admiralty in a casualty list says that five officers were lost in the sinking of the Ramsay and that two were lost in the sinking of the torpedo boat destroyer Lynx when she struck a mine in the North Sea Monday.

Orders For Steel.

The United States Steel Corporation reported the amount of unfilled orders on hand on July 31 last as 4,928,540 tons, an increase of 250,344 tons as compared with June 30 last. On that date the unfilled orders on hand amounted to 4,678,196 tons.

Unfilled tonnage on May 31 was 4,-2264,598 tons; April 30, 4,162,244 tons; March 31, 4,255,749 tons; February 28, 4,345,371 tons, and July 31, 1914, 4,-158,589 tons.

The amount of the orders on hand to July is the largest reported for any month since September, 1913. In connection with the increase attention was drawn by steel men to the fact that the orders were taken on a price level much higher than that which prevailed earlier in the year. A large per centage of the business was for export, they added, the steel being intended for conversion into war material. As such it commands a much higher price than if intended for domestic and commercial purposes.

Balkan States May Enter the War on the Side of the Allies

Big Wheat Order Cancelled in America---Opening of the Dardanelles Expected Soon

It is Also Thought That the Allies Are Now Assured of An Agreement With the Balkan States and Have Purchased Their Wheat Crop---Swedish Steamer Wrecked.

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 13.—George Joseph Smith, "Bride's bath" murderer, died on the gallows to-day for the killing of Beatrice Mundy, one of his three wives, who died mysteriously in a bath tub.

CRUISER FOUNDERED.

LISBON, Aug. 13.—The Portuguese cruiser "Republica" foundered on the rocks off Sriceira, 22 miles northwest of here to-day, and is a total loss. Her crew was taken off and her larger guns salvaged.

CANCELLED ORDER FOR WHEAT.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—The wheat market to-day was influenced by a cancellation of an order for two million bushels of American wheat for France and Great Britain. Various reasons are given here for this action on the part of the Allies. Probably most likely it is that the Allies are now assured of the agreement with the Bulkan States and have purchased their great wheat crop. Another guess is that the Allies are assured of the opening of the Dardanelles and of the exodus of a great crop from Southern Russia.

SWEDISH STEAMER WRECKED.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The 4,638 ton Swedish steamer Kiruna, from Philadelphia to Stockholm, has gone ashore on the Skerrie Islands, sixty miles west of Liverpool. Despatches to Lloyd's to day said in all probability she will be a total wreck.

BULGARIA'S ENTRY INTO WAR ONLY QUESTION OF TIME

Serbia Bowing to the Wishes of the Allies—Will Get Compensation if it Cedes Provinces to the Bulgarians

Special to The Examiner:

ATHENS, Aug. 13.— The entry of Bulgaria in the war against Turkey is only a question of time, writes Louis Edgar Borwne to the Toronto Star. It is officially confirmed that the attitude of Bulgaria and Serbia is highly favourable to the recent proposition of the Entente Powers, which agreed to induce Greece and Serbia to cede to Bulgaria the disputed Provinces in Macedonia. Serbia will be compensated in Albania and Greece in Smyrna, and Asia Minor. These cessions and annexations, it is hoped, will materialize in the conclusion of a successful war against the Teuton alliance. Bulgaria's integrity is assured for a certain period after war. A note received yesterday, conveys the information that Serbia is willing to cede to Bulgaria the territory desired, but offers instead, Monastir, and other Macedonian territory if not incompatible with Bulgaria's wishes. Serbia is not insistent and bows to the wish of the Entente Powers.

Leaders in all political powers in Bulgaria and Cabinet Ministers are urging Bulgaria to accept the favourable overtures of the Entente. King Ferdinand is still opposing, fearing the ultimate triumph of Germany, but he is expected to accept the advice of his Cabinet.

The Entente diplomats say German influence in Sofia is powerless to stem the tide. Bulgaria is expected to throw its military strength through Adrianople in a quick rush on Tchataldja.

Greece is thrown into a bad position as it has indicated an intention of rejecting the overtures of the allies. The Grecian Cabinet is in great consternation. Newspapers are crying for Venizelos. Greece is expected to consent to the terms of the allies for ceding the Kavala Hinterland, but will probably not take active part in the war.

Joffre Says He Will Start Drive Before Germans Do

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—"DON'T WORRY ABOUT THEM, I'LL START BEFORE THEY DO."

This is reported, and generally believed here, to have been the answer of Gen Joffre to the questions of Lord Kitchener and the other persons at the recent conference in Calais, when the matter of what would happen when the Germans turned their armies westward after the capture of Warsaw.

This view finds general acceptance in military circls here. Just where and when Gen. Joffre will "start" no one pretends to know, but that he has every intention of "beating the Germans to the punch," to use the prize ring phrase, no one doubts MOST PERSONS IN THE BEST POSITION TO JUDGE BELIEVE THAT BEFORE THE END OF THE MONTH the WESTERN FRONT OF THE GERMANS WILL BE CALLED ON TO WITHSTAND A FRENCH BLOW BESIDE WHICH THE DRIVE AT THE LINES NORTH OF ARRAS WAS A MINOR INCIDENT The lull, which has been almost complete along the entire western front for more than a week, in view of these observers, is merely the calm before the storm, during which Gen. Joffre has been quietly gathering his forces, resting those that need it, conditioning the whole army as a trainer conditions an athlete, assembling the immense quantities of ammunition required and biding his time for the blow."

667 Vessels Lost in 1914, Says Lloyd's Reports

Special to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Lloyd's statistical summary of vessels of 100 tons upward lost, condemned or otherwise removed shows that during the year 1914 the effective mercantile marine of the world was reduced by 667 vessels of 926,134 tons, of which 491 were steamships of 870,662 tons and 275 sailing vessels of 184,450 tons. This is an increase over the figures of 1913 of 388,000 tons and is due almost wholly to war operations.

The United Kingdom lost 101 vessels of 229,179 tons by war ships or by mines, while the figures for Germany are 13 vessels of 67,641 tons.

Apart from the war, the greatest losses of the world's shipping are under the heading of "wrecked," 258 vessels of 288,470 tons, or 40 to 45 per cent. of the total losses being thus classified.

While the United Kingdom has lost 2.2 per cent. of the tonnage and 2.43 per cent. of the vessels owned, the losses of neutral countries total 2.37 per cent. and 2.82 per cent. respectively.

Lights on the Milk Problem

A very attractive pamphlet by the Life Insurance Company shows a cow in a pasture field and over her is erected a stone aten of which pasteurization is the key-stone.

"The subject is dealt with in the form of a series of questions. On the first page is an illustration of a child's tomb-tone on which the name is obliterated but underneath are the words "Died by the Disgrace of Impure Milk."

In answer to the question "Did Nature Intend Us to Use Cow's Milk" the writer says, "No."

"What is the advantage of nature's plan?" "In nature's plan the milk is taken directly at its source while pure, fresh, sweet, clean and wholesome. Milk was never intended to see the light of day. Nature's plan keeps out dirt, germs, flies and fevers."

After pointing out the high food value of clean milk and that it is one of the cheapest food on the market the danger of tainting milk by absorbing flavours and odour is pointed out as is the danger of milk decomposing quickly unless pasteurized and kept cold.

How should milk be cared for in the home? "Milk should not be allowed to stand out of doors, but should be taken in as soon as it is delivered. In the home, milk should be kept cold, clean and covered. If part of the milk in a bottle is used, do not replace the paper stopper, but invert a clean tumbler over the neck of the bottle and at once replace in the icechest. Have a special place in the coldest part of the icechest for the milk bottles. The best way is to have the milk bottle touching the ice."

The dangers of "dip" milk and of milk put in a bottle which has not been properly sterilized, are referred to, also the advantages of bottle milk which are, "cleanliness and protection from dirt, flies, fingers and germs." Licensing all milk dealers is strongly recommended, as the author considers this more important than licensing "plumbers, undertakers or trained nurses."

In answer to the question "Is a very rich milk good for the baby" He says, "No, it is harmful. Too much fat causes indigestion and a sort of self-poisoning, leading to diarrhoea and summer complaint."

While milk contains millions of bacteria in every spoonful, "they are not necessarily harmful. Mere numbers need not frighten. It is the kind of bacteria rather than the number that concerns us. Many of the bacteria in milk are our friends not our enemies.

In answer to the question, "How is milk classified?" we read, "There are only two classes of milk, good milk and bad milk. There is a tendency to classify all milk as raw milk or pasteurized."

Is pure milk better than purified milk? "It is, but it is so difficult to get pure milk that our only real safety lies in pasteurization."

"What is the solution of the milk problem?" "Inspection and pasteurization. We need inspection to keep milk clean, we need pasteurization to render milk safe."

H. H. Dean, in Farmers' Advocate.

PAID HIS FINE

In yesterday's paper it was stated in connection with the Bridgenorth liquor cases that Wm. True had not paid his fine. The reverse is the case. Mr. True has paid his fine, but Henry Gravelle, the other man in the case, did not pay his fine and is confined to jail.

Mohammedan Soldiers Turn Night to Day

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The Turco-Algerian riflemen and other soldiers of the Mohammedan faith from other parts of Africa serving in the French army now drink their coffee at sunset, take their lunch thirty minutes later and have their dinner at midnight. This turning of night into day is the consequence of the Ramadan, the annual feast of the Muselman, extending over a period of a month from July 13 to August 12, during which he abstains from food and drink every day between dawn and sunset.

Following the rule established last year, to respect the religious feasts of all soldiers in the French army and to facilitate their observance, the Minister of War ordered that the commissary department furnish supplies to the Mohammedan soldiers in accordance with their traditions.

Paris, July 15, 1915.

To the Editor of the World:

Dear Sir,—As there has been a growing desire for a universal prayer on the part of a given moment asking for spiritual understanding, we write to ask your co-operation in making this request.

That the 30th day of August at noon (Paris time) be set for the world's union.

Word is being sent to all churches and to all countries, thus giving opportunity to those so led to stand quiet for two minutes wherever they may be and meet in spiritual communion those who are doing the same on all sides. We remain,

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

Partner he looked the ground over good, and finally settled on a nice little section of rollin' country up on the bar shoulder. "There," sez he, pointin' with his finger about a inch from the baby's skin, "I stake out my claim right in that dent there on that shoulder."

"Dent?" sez Mollie scornful. "That bar's don't have dents; that's a dimple."

"Well, it's mine from this one," sez Panther. He wiped off his mustache and his mouth and from the curious, subdued look on his face I reckon some part of him was cryin' out repentance and another part of him was prayin' that that baby's scar'd never stay above some of the pains which his own had trod.

He clasped his hands behind his back. "Hold her steady, ma'am," sez he in a scairt voice, and then he leaned forward slow and gentle and kissed the little fairy finger print on that soft, pink skin, and the moisture come into his eyes, so that just for one hair trigger second they lost their lonesome look and held a trace of that selfless givin' which is the crowning beauty of a mother's glance.

Then he winked his eyes hard and started to straighten up. Sunshine was mighty partial to moustaches and she reached her bold little hand up over her left shoulder and got a firm grip on Panther's nose bulky one, and the expression on his face was the most comical thing you've ever seen.

He gave a couple of gentle tugs, but Sunshine had made up her mind to pull out that moustache as a conqueror of the occasion, and she tugged and squealed and giggled and had a good time. When Mrs. Cooper tried to loosen her hold the baby seemed to cry, and Panther—he crossed and snapped, "Let the kid alone, you're hurtin' her. I'll exercise discretion time I do."

He got out his knife, but Mollie says: "No, you'll not, I don't intend to have it cut off."

"Aw, what's the difference," sez Panther, "she'll know soon enough."

It was a pleasant job to see Mollie Cooper blush. "What I meant was, that I don't intend to have my child spoiled by bein' humoured," sez she.

"Well, that ain't the only way to spoil 'em," sez he, bitterly.

Mollie had loosed the baby's hands and now they were lookin' into each other's eyes; Mollie's stern but full of fun, Sunshine's full of resentment to match her lower lip, but she only whimpered a time or two and then broke into a smile and looked up to Panther.

"Be kind to that baby, ma'am," sez he. "You stand some chance of squarin' off the licks you get after you've got some growth, but there's no come-back for the beatin's ya get while you're still a kid."

"You needn't fear," sez Mrs. Cooper, with a smile.

"And don't you forget that I've got a claim staked out on that left shoulder, and that I allus try to look after what's mine," sez Panther, beginnin' to back to the door, nervous like.

"All right," sez Mrs. Cooper, who found the strain beginnin' to tell on her.

He stepped outside, held the door open a minute, and then said: "I'm in earnest about sayin' that I intend to do what I can for that baby. I'm Panther Emmons and I came down here to spoil things. The' hasn't nothin' come my way for over a year, now, and I wanted to make a smash. I had a feller write to your husband that he'd better keep his eye on that Jamison dude."

Mollie rose to her feet holdin' the baby on her left arm: "You surely didn't do that, did you?" sez she in a hurt voice.

"That's what I did," sez Panther, "everything's gone again' me 'til I'm like a mad dog; but I'm sorry for it on account of the kid. I came down here to-day to smash things up. I intended to leave things so the Englishman 'd get lynched; and I'd sure 'a' done it if that baby 'd been asleep when I got here.

"I knew you'd have that Hagus pack here to-night, so intended to have them get the first suspicion, and then when your man got back, the'd be a crowd already raised and they'd string up Jamison on short notice. But that baby has finished me. I couldn't do nothin' to harm her, and you needn't worry about me any more. I got all my plans laid to get out of the country, and they'll never catch me. Good-by, kid."

He slammed on his hat and banged the door, and Mrs. Cooper threw down the bar. Her face had got pale and she seemed beside herself, but she wasn't one of the fainty kind, and so I didn't let her know I was there, thinkin' she would rather tell Dan without lettin' him know that anyone else knew.

I stepped to the corner of the house and kept my eye on Panther as he hurried up to the little mott o' timber back of the mule-barn. I thought he'd get his hoss and hide east to the Territory; but the Hagus boys were just comin' in with the strays, and he rode right down by the house and into the stage road.

Mollie Cooper had watched him from the window and when he started back for the house, she fair stampeded. She clutched the baby up in a blanket and ran out into the road towards Haguses. Mandy was still near a quarter away, and Mrs. Cooper began to call to her as she ran, called and screamed like a wild person.

Panther sat on his hoss lookin' after her with a queer smile on his lips and then he shook his head to think what poor judement she had used if there'd been any danger of him changin' his mind. Then he threw in the spurs and started north.

Just before he reached the turn, Red and Shorty came sweepin' around it at a fair travelin' shuffle, they saw Mrs. Cooper runnin' down the road screamin' and they saw Panther Emmons ridin' away from her on the run, and they all three drew at the same time, but Shorty shot first, and Shorty didn't waste time on fancy shootin' when he was in earnest. Panther reeled in his saddle but shot back and they kept it up until Panther doubled up on his saddle horn. He gripped the mane and hung on for a couple o' strides and then he slipped off at the side of the road.

Red had kept cool through it all, he had held his gun ready; but he saw that Panther was shootin' wild, and he knew that Shorty had yearned for a chance at Panther ever since he had forced war on Tom Smith. Red had also seen Mandy Hagus down the road runnin' to meet Mrs. Cooper, and when Panther slipped to the earth, Red rode on down to where the women were.

I felt purty well mixed up. My common sense told me that Panther Emmons was better out of the world than not; but he had showed out his soft side that afternoon, and I was glad the job hadn't been left for me to do. I walked up to where Panther was gaspin', and Shorty got off and helped me move him under a tree. He was shot in three places and nothin' kept him alive but his rawhide toughness and his wire nerves. His curious eyes were still full of defiance.

"You got me right, little feller," sez he to Shorty, "and I reckon it's no more than right that I should die innocent. I swear I didn't so much as lay the weight o' my finger on that woman. I swear it was me that had the letter sent to her husband warnin' him about that Jamison dude, and I swear that if any low-lived scoundrel ever harms that baby which I've got a claim staked out on, I'll come back and haunt hell out of him. Now, that's all I've got to say, so don't bother me."

His voice was as strong as ever, so I left Shorty sittin' by him and went after some water. When I looked down the road I saw Baldy Hagus drivin' the women up to the house in his chariot and when he reached it he stopped, jumped down and started for where Panther was lyin' while I got some water, and Red helped the women out of the chariot.

When I got back, Baldy was shakin' his fist in Panther's face and givin' him what-so, for the beatin' he had been handed the night before, and Panther was actually grinnin'. "I know ya," sez Baldy. "I've got it all figgered out; you and this Panhandle Kid have been workin' together, and Big Jeff, too. You are the 'ones who have been shootin' me up and beatin' me and lynchin' me and false-accusin' me for the last few years; but I reck on I'm about even with you, now. Old Josiah Cornell will get Big Jeff's scalp, here you are, pantin' out fast enough to suit even me, and I set a posse on the Panhandle Kid, this very afternoon."

"What do you mean by that?" sez Panther.

"I figgered it out all right," sez Baldy, snappin' his head. "I thought things were funny the way they acted when I let that Tom Smith get away to Big Jeff, then I heard rumours about you and Big Jeff goin' to get Tom Smith, then I heard about a posse bein' after the Panhandle Kid and Happy Hawkins nosin' 'em off the trail, then my youngest boy told me this mornin' that him and Flames had come upon a feller hidin' out in the thicket over west of the Lion Head ranch-house. He was fast asleep but the boys thought sure he was Tom Smith and so they didn't say nothin'."

"I didn't say nothin' either, did I? Oh, no, not at that time I didn't but when I got to Gabe Hummage's store I did, you betcha. I whispered in Gabe's ear and in less 'n twenty minutes ten men were ridin' out along the trail I had told 'em was safest, and I reckon the Panhandle Kid is purty near as safe as you are by this time."

Baldy was gloatin' savage and shakin' his fist in Panther's face. I winked Shorty to one side and said that I had to go back to the ranch, but that he and Red had better stay at Cooper's. "If Dan comes back you tell him I saw the whole thing from the porch but not to let Mrs. Cooper know. A good scare 'll make her more careful. You'd better send one of the Hagus boys after a doctor, and don't you worry none about the law. You're all right and it was the plainest case of self-defense ever I saw. Old Baldy has been 'drinkin' some but not enough to give him license to spoil anybody's deathbed, so if you feel like knockin' him on the head as soon as I get away, it'll be all right with me.

"It's the truth about Tom Smith, so if you find us in the midst of anything when you come back to the ranch, don't cut down on anybody. This is serious business and shootin' 'll make it worse for Tom Smith.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An American Messenger

He Carried a Dispatch In the European War.

By GEORGE Y. EARNED

Cyrus Delano, an American, went to Italy when he was twenty years old and was so delighted with the country, the climate, the historical associations, that he found it hard to get away. Finally he settled in Rome and became a foreign resident of that interesting city. Several years passed, during which Delano became intimate with many Italian citizens of prominence and was invited to social functions in the royal circle. On several occasions he met the king, who seemed to take a great fancy to him.

Then like a bolt from heaven came the great European war. Italy found herself in a very equivocal position. A member of the triple alliance with Germany and Austria, a bitter hatred existing on the part of Italians against the Austrians, unprepared to enter the fray on either side, the government was in a quandary. Nevertheless the sympathies of both the government and the people were strongly in favor of the allies.

One day when Cyrus Delano was walking idly down the Via Nationale, watching the knots of people discussing the advance of the German troops into Belgium, he felt a tap on his shoulder. Turning, he saw a gentleman he did not remember to have seen before, who said to him:

"Signor Delano, will you please accompany me. The minister of foreign affairs wishes to speak to you."

Wondering what in the world so distinguished a functionary wished with him, Delano accompanied the man to the foreign office and without any delay whatever was ushered into the office of the secretary. There was another person present whom Delano recognized as the French ambassador. The former asked the American to be seated and then began to interrogate him. When he had finished the questions he said:

"Mr. Delano, this is the ambassador from France. He desires to send a very important message to his government at Paris. In this I am equally interested on behalf of the Italian government. We are beset by spies. If we send an Italian or a Frenchman he is liable to be waylaid by secret emissaries of the members of the triple alliance. An American will have a far better chance to get through with the message than one of a different nationality. Besides, you Americans are fertile in expedients. Indeed, you are a very bright people."

Delano, though he had no preference for either side, was quite pleased with the idea of such a service and at having been chosen for it. He accepted the mission and was told that the dispatch would be sent to him the same afternoon and it was desirable that he depart at the earliest possible moment afterward.

"However," said the secretary, "we have decided to intrust you with a knowledge of what the message contains. If you are waylaid and robbed of the document you can in that case proceed and deliver your message orally. We shall send a person known to be in our confidence to confirm what you say. What we desire to impart to the French government is this: As members of the triple alliance we are expected to threaten France in the south while she is attacked in the north. All the French troops will be needed on the northern border. We are sending word by you that we have no intention whatever of attacking France. For the present at least we shall remain neutral."

"I confess, your excellency," said Delano, "that I feel highly flattered at having been chosen to carry a message of such vital importance."

Delano was then furnished with funds for his journey and given instructions as to the different routes he might pursue. Then he took his departure and began preparations for his journey.

The shortest route from Rome to French territory is by way of Genoa. Therefore if spies were on Delano's track they would naturally expect him to proceed by this route. It was therefore decided that he should go by Switzerland, passing through Lucerne, Berne and Neuchatel.

Having received the dispatch, which was written in as small compass as possible, Delano called a cab and was driven to the railway station. Walking back and forth on the platform was a lady whom he had met at functions at the Quirinal palace. Mme. Tatiani, a Greek, who he had understood was distantly related to the queen of that country. The lady on seeing Delano smiled graciously, though he did not remember to have been presented to her.

"Oh, Signor Delano! Are you going on the train? Yes? I am so glad. I dislike traveling very much and shall be glad of your company."

Delano said that he was going to Switzerland, since he could no longer stand the midsummer weather of Rome. He expressed himself pleased in words at the lady's company, but his brows were knit, for he had been assured that he could trust no one, and the most effective spies were women of high degree. However, resolving to be on his guard, he made the best of what he considered a misfortune and at Mme. Tatiani's invitation took a seat in a compartment that she had engaged for her own exclusive use.

The lady was a woman verging on thirty and had been very beautiful. That beauty had but little faded, and her mental attractiveness was at its best. Delano soon became aware that she was endeavoring to fascinate him. She adored Americans, pronounced them a marvelous people, and the absence of European conventionality in them gave them a freshness that other people did not have. Her eyes were very expressive, and she kept them constantly fixed on Delano's.

At 10 o'clock Delano left the lady's compartment after she had exacted a promise from him to see her the next morning. He was intending to give her the slip at Lucerne and tried to do so, but when he was hurrying away to a train for Berne a man stepped up to him and informed him that a lady wished to speak to him. Resigning himself to another meeting with his fair companion of the evening before, he followed the man to the waiting room, where he found her.

"Ah, Mr. Delano," she exclaimed, with a reproachful look, "were you going to desert me? Did I not tell you that I was going on the same route as yourself? What have I done that you should treat me so?" The last words were spoken with a tinge of sadness and a look from her beautiful eyes that would have conquered almost any man.

Delano was certainly affected by her apparent preference for him, and had he trusted any one he certainly would have trusted her. He would have resigned himself to travel further with her without reluctance had he not been sensible of the great importance of the message he bore.

On reaching Berne the lady begged him to see that her trunks were put on the train for Neuchatel, which did not leave for an hour. Delano went off to look for the trunks and was directed from one railway official to another till he was in a far distant part of the station. Suddenly he saw a man coming hurriedly toward him and two others from another direction. They closed in on him and were dragging him to an exit when they were in turn attacked by several others.

Delano, whose brain worked very quickly, saw at a glance what this all meant. The Greek was an agent of others and had sent him after her trunks to get him where he could be attacked by agents of the secret service with a view to robbing him of his dispatch. What he did not know was that the Italian government had sent men to follow him and be ready to assist him should he be interfered with. He supposed those who had come to his rescue were persons who had seen a stranger attacked and considered it their duty to help him.

The rescuers were all powerful men and soon drove off the assailants. Then one of them picked up Delano's hat that had been knocked off in the fray and offered it to him. The others disappeared in different directions. Then the one who was left said to him in a whisper:

"Follow me."

Leaving the station, the man struck into the town and after turning in different directions went into a wineshop. Delano followed him and was told by him that he was an officer of the Italian carabineers, or national police. He and half a dozen men in plain clothes had been sent by the government to shadow and protect him.

"There is another train tonight," he said to Delano, "which we will board at the first station west of Berne. My men will meet us there. Any one of us seen to get on the train here would give us away. I do not expect to avoid them, but it is possible by the plan I propose to do so."

"But how," asked Delano, "did they get word of my coming on my mission?"

"Spies—spies everywhere. They are among the clerks even of the government offices. Doubtless your visit to the foreign office was reported immediately."

Delano and the carabineer remained where they were till dark. Then the latter sent out for a cab, and, entering it with their hats drawn down over their faces, they were driven some ten miles to a station, where they boarded a train. The other members of the party got on at different points, and Delano was informed that there were in all a dozen men, stout and well armed. All were in citizens' dress and many of them disguised.

Evidently the arrangements made for Delano's protection were far more perfect than those of the other side, for, though the officer in command of the carabineers pointed out various persons who were secretly watching to take him, they were not in sufficient force to do so. However, on changing trains at Neuchatel they made one last effort. Delano was walking through the crowded station when some one cried out:

"A spy!"

Immediately there was a rush for him by many persons. But the carabineers, who came from all directions, formed a circle about him, and some with their fists and others with their canes repelled the crowd till the police began to arrive, when the ringleaders vanished and the rest dispersed. Then Delano, guarded by the Italian chief, entered the train and was whirled away to Paris.

When the messenger was driven to the president's residence and sent in word that he was the bearer of dispatches from the Italian government he was admitted immediately.

"This," said the president, "is the most important announcement you could have brought."

DON'T USE SOAP ON YOUR HAIR

When you wash your hair don't use soap. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious as it dries the scalp and heats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drugstore and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

Greek Testaments.

The first printed Greek Testaments were those of Erasmus, published in Basel by Froben in 1516.

Military Uniforms.

Uniforms were first adopted by the English military organization in the seventeenth century.

Hargreaves.

For inventing the spinning jenny in 1767 James Hargreaves of Blackburn, England, was driven from his county.

Marriage in Japan.

A Japanese husband is allowed only one wife, but to marry is sometimes a much more serious matter than with us. Either the husband must be formally adopted into the family of the wife or the wife into the family of the husband, the couple being absorbed into one family and subject to its discipline. As a rule, this custom weighs more heavily on the bride than on the husband, for she must not only obey her husband, but every member of his family of an older generation than himself; hence a young woman often longs for old age, so that she may wield authority over the younger generations. To bring about a marriage in Japan an intermediary is appointed, whose duty it is to introduce the parties and to look to every arrangement of the wedding. He remains through life the guide, philosopher and friend of the married couple, who refer all matters, all misunderstandings, to his counsel.—Pearson's.

Napoleon a Good Reader.

Napoleon not only read a great deal, but read with profit. His memory was extraordinary. Take, for instance, his knowledge of Roman civil law, long passages of which he once recited off by heart to the astonishment of the state council engaged with him in the production of the Code Napoleon. To one of the counsellors he explained how he gained his legal learning. When a young lieutenant he found in the cupboard of a prison room in which he was confined a ponderous tome of Roman law. "You can easily imagine," he said, "what a valuable prize that book was. When, at the end of ten days, I recovered my freedom I was saturated with Justinian and the Roman legal decisions." Napoleon added that the old book was covered with marginal notes—so much so that he could not have been idle if his imprisonment had "lasted a century."

The Country Newspaper.

I am ashamed to say that I had entertained a good humored tolerance, mingled with contempt, for country newspapers. They seemed to me the apotheosis of the little, the palladium of the uninteresting.

It did not occur to me that anything possessed of such tenacity of life as the country newspaper must have a real meaning and perform a genuine function in our civilization. In this roaring age of efficiency we do not long support any institution that does not set its claws deep into our common life—and hang on.—David Grayson in American Magazine.

SHE REPENTED

WHEN the first man was created and a mate was given to him, they lived together happily for a time, but then began to quarrel, until finally the woman left her husband, and started off toward the Sun land in the east. The man followed alone and grieving, but the woman never looked behind. Finally the Sun took pity on the man and asked him if he were still angry with his wife. He said he was not, and then the Sun asked him if he would like to have her back again, to which he eagerly answered yes.

So the Sun caused a patch of the finest ripe huckleberries to spring up along the path in front of the woman, but she passed by. Further on he put a clump of blackberries, but these also she refused to notice. Other fruits, one, two, and three, and then some trees covered with beautiful service berries, were placed beside the path to tempt her, but she still went on until suddenly she saw a patch of large ripe strawberries, the first ever known. She stooped to gather a few to eat and as she picked them she chanced to turn her face to the west, and at once the memory of her husband came back and she found herself unable to go on. She sat down, but the longer she waited the stronger became her desire for her husband, and at last she gathered a bunch of the finest berries and started back along the path to give them to him. He met her kindly and they went home together.

Anybody can float with the current but it takes a real man to swim against the stream.

He Closed the Door.

The trump knuckled the farmer's door. The farmer responded.

"Friend," said the vagabond, "I'd like a job."

The farmer looked him over.

"What can you do?" he asked.

"I can hoe for sap."

The farmer shook his head.

"No," he said, "with a face like that you wouldn't need to do no hoein'. The sap would run as soon as it saw you."

And he closed the door.—Cleveland Fain Dealer.

Florida.

Florida was named by Ponce de Leon not because he thought it was a land of flowers, but for the reason that he reached its shores on the Spanish festival day Pascua de Flores, or Feast of Flowers. He had heard that it was a land teeming with gold, and if he could see it now, 400 years later than his landing in 1513, he would find that he had not been mistaken, though the gold is not taken from the earth, but from apples of gold called oranges, from oceans of fruit and vegetables shipped to the north in winter and millions of dollars spent by visitors during the northern frigid season.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Reminders of Stagecoaches.

The four feet eight and one-half inch gauge is not the only "horse" reminder on English railways. The coaching era is still remembered in the "guard" of a train, the "booking office" and in the "coaches" themselves. And "horse" power is still our measure of strength, as candle power perpetuates in an age of electricity the lighting methods of an older time. Steamers "sail" and the sun "sets," in popular language, against the facts that every schoolboy knows. And a candidate who swoops down on a constituency from afar, is he not still a "carpetbagger?" Now, where will you see such an article nowadays unless it be as a carpenter's holdall?—London Answers.

Eau de Cologne.

John Maria Farina, who invented eau de cologne in the eighteenth century, was an Italian. The secret recipe is supposed to have been handed down to the descendants of his family and connections, who manufacture it under his name to this day. Most of them are in Cologne, but not all. Some of Farina's descendants are in Italy manufacturing an eau de cologne just as original and excitable as that from Cologne itself. The famous perfume is a blend of the essential oils of ... (from a sort of orange), citron, bergamot (two other relations of the orange family), rosemary and the orange itself. The citric scent is obviously the predominant odor.

Absolute Zero.

The absolute zero of temperature, absence of all heat energy, is 461 degrees below the zero of Fahrenheit. Liquid helium is 454 below, liquid air 310, and liquid hydrogen 418. These degrees of cold are beyond comprehension. And many new properties of matter have been discovered by subjecting various phases—elements—to these low temperatures. Thus, it is a theory that chemically pure metals would allow all of a current of electricity to pass without resistance—that is, the more nearly the absolute purity and absolute cold are reached the less the observed and measured resistance to flow of electricity.—New York American.

New Old Slang.

Modern slang isn't necessarily new. It has been pointed out lately that "good night" in its modern slang sense appears in Shakespeare. In "Henry IV.," part one, Worcester, speaking of the danger of the conspiracy (Act one, scene three), refers to the peril of one who should attempt to o'erwalk "a current roaring loud, on the unsteadfast footing of a spear." Hotspur continues, "If he fall in, good night!"

As a young man Washington wrote, "I heard the bullets whistle, and, believe me, there is something charming in the sound." That "believe me" is almost modern enough for a moving picture show.—Kansas City Star.

James I. and Soap.

James I. was actively interested in the soap industry. In return for a payment of £6 per ton on all soap produced James granted the Company of Soapmakers of Westminster the monopoly for the making of soap in England. The importation of soap was forbidden, and officers were appointed to deal with illicit soap boiling, its manufacture, even in private houses for domestic purposes, being punishable by heavy penalties. Moreover, a proclamation was issued announcing that "the soap made by the company is good, sweet and serviceable for our people." The annual revenue drawn by the king from this source amounted to about £30,000.—London Express.

Doctor Said Only Hope Was In An Operation

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement, in regard to Dr Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from annoying, distressing piles for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Almost every mail brings the report of someone who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that the cure is genuine and the writer a person of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr. Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that the pain, the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Ernest W. Ingles, Penticton, B.C., writes: "I suffered from piles for ten years and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thing that would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. We are so certain that any sufferer from piles will obtain relief by using this ointment that we do not hesitate to make you this offer. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

ONE WAY OF USING TWO MATERIALS.

By Anabel Worthington.

Combinations of material and sometimes of color as well are the rule of the hour. In dresses like the one shown in our illustration it is not uncommon to find the lighter portions made of net or chiffon while the balance is of silk, the lining of contrasting color showing through the sheer fabric. Another manner is to use two materials in one color, as navy blue serge and navy blue silk, or else to use all serge or all silk, with part of it plain and part of it plaid or striped. There are numbers of beautiful plaids which are not at all vivid, with dark grounds and very narrow lines of color, and these are found with a groundwork to match all the leading tones.

The little overblouse is cut away in front to display the front of the waist, and it is to this that the long puff sleeves are attached. The skirt has a deep upper or yoke section, gathered at the top and with the two gore lower portion joined to it without fulness. This flares at the lower edge to a measurement of 3¾ yards.

In this design we find another of the many ideas which the present season's modes permit for the remodelling of our last year's garments. For an old skirt we would have to raise it, no doubt, and add new material at the bottom, perhaps even shortening the deep flounce.

The pattern of this dress, No. 7217, may be had in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 2½ yards of 40 inch light material and 3 yards of 44 inch dark material, with 4⅛ yards of braid banding.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age if a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

SOLDIERS' OWN EPIC OF NEW "PENINSULA"

Gallipoli Saw Glorious Feats of Arms Amid Unique Difficulties—Empire Marvels at Last

Only slowly and when narratives of soldiers' experiences have piled up to corroborate and illumine the official despatches have the immense difficulties of the now famous Gallipoli campaign been realised by the British Empire. An epic of modern heroism is gradually unfolding, tales of charges up shell-dotted hills, in the face of withering machine gun fire and murderous sniping, followed by slow advances against great natural obstacles and stubborn defenders. In this great struggle, already historic, many races have shared, and notably the men of the Antipodes.

An Australian trooper of the brave little Antipodean contingent which long held a bit of coast at Gaba Tepe, writes as follows. "Under cover of darkness the Turks drove two saps to within four yards of our lines. The dawn revealed to us the two danger points strongly fortified by sandbags. The situation having been reported to brigade headquarters, the instructions came back that the saps "A" and "B" be destroyed. Special men were selected to form the two storming parties. Thirty men swarmed over the trench top and were greeted with a withering fire. Half a dozen fell back dead or wounded and the rest endeavored to cover the paltry four yards to the sap heads. Another dozen were knocked over during the scramble over the bodies of the dead which lay on that twelve feet. One party turned the Turks out of a sap and were then compelled to retire, leaving the demolition work to be done later. The second party bayonetted the occupants of the point it assaulted, destroyed the sap and occupied its head.

Tried Their Mettle

"The terrible carnage among the Turks during their effort to dislodge us put great heart into our ranks. Ever alert we were ready to meet the strain when it came. The sight of seemingly endless masses of the enemy advancing upon them might well have shaken the nerve of the already tried troops. Our machine guns and artillery mowed the attackers down in hundreds, and still the advancing wall swept on. On still! Would the ranks never waste in strength? Not till the mass was at point-blank range from the middle trigger fingers did it break and spend itself amongst our barbed wire entanglements. Turks were shot in the act of jumping into our trenches.

"The Germans sent their supports and reserves forward in droves. It was sickening to behold the slaughter our fire made amongst the massed battalions. These unfortunate Turks scrambled along towards us over piles of dead bodies. In an instant a company would be enveloped in the smoke of a shrapnel salvo. When the air cleared that company would be stretched or writhing on the ground, with another company approaching and ready to share its predecessor's fate. It became a question not of the success or otherwise of the attack, but how many we could kill."

Snipers, Shells and Cliffs

Sergt. S. Marsh, writing home, says of the Turkish snipers: "My section was detached from my company and sent across a nullah after some snipers. We got them all right. They were painted green all over, with branches of trees stuck in their clothing to make them less conspicuous. However, when we tried to join our company again we found we could not do so because of Turkish fire. Very soon they were all around us. I found a chap of ours behind a small tree; he was wounded. I was bandaging him up when over comes a shell, took the tree up by its roots, and, marvellous to relate, neither of us were hit. We made a bold bid for freedom, and got to the cliffs all right. Then a shot coming from somewhere hit me in the foot. Naturally I shouted and jumped, and missed my footing and fell to the bottom."

How the Irish Landed

An Irish chaplain, whose brother went fighting with the Dublin fusiliers to Gallipoli, gives a stirring story extracted from a letter which he recently received. The writer was a student at the Irish bar. "The Lord knows we have been through the mill," he wrote, "since you last heard from me. This is the first rest I have had after a fortnight's continuous fighting. My baptism of fire was a terrible experience, but in a few days I had lost all sense of fear and sensation. At our landing the beggars were magnificently entrenched, and the wire entanglements looked absolutely invulnerable. It fell to the Munsters and the Dublins to force a landing. We cut the entanglements in one mad rush, took the forts and a village, and then cleared the Turks out of the trenches. It was a glorious sight when we made one of those cold steel charges for which the Blue Caps are famous. What an ordeal, too, setting off the old steamer! If you had the misfortune to get hit on the gangway nothing could save you from the watery grave. One by one, the old Dubs and Munsters dropped out, but we never turned a hair. Assistance soon came, and another regiment arrived, all the lads singing "Here we are again." We pitched the Turks back five miles and then came the moment to avenge the poor lads who had fallen. We waited until they were within 50 yards of our trenches again and then, by all the saints in the calendar, we poured shot and shell on them, finishing the job with the bayonet. I lost every pal I knew—not one was left but you should have heard us singing "Bravo, the Dublin Fusiliers."

In some parts of Siberia milk is sold frozen around a piece of wood, which serves as a handle to carry it.

When new shoes pinch immediate and lasting relief can be obtained from the application of a cloth wet with hot water and laid across the place that is giving trouble.

GOTTLIEB VON JAGOW HAS LITERARY TASTES

Was Noted Before the War For His English Tastes—Married Aged Countess at Kaiser's Behest

Gottlieb Von Jagow, the Kaiser's Foreign Minister belongs to one of the oldest houses of the petty nobility of Germany, and as such was qualified to marry, a few weeks before the outbreak of the war, Countess Luitgarde Solms, of the mediatised and formerly sovereign house of that name, which had the effect of placing him on terms of kinsmanship with half the reigning houses of Europe. It is understood that it was not altogether a love match, the bride being somewhat mature, but that it was a matrimonial alliance which was arranged by the Kaiser, in his impulsive way, at the instance of the Empress William as usual refusing to brook any contradiction in the matter, either on the part of the bride or of the bridegroom.

Von Jagow was, at any rate until the beginning of the war, a most conciliatory man, noted for his markedly English taste, and for his extensive knowledge of English literature. At Rome, where he filled the role of Ger man ambassador for some years, he was the most intimate friend of the British ambassador, Sir Rennell Rodd.

While not handsome, Jagow is distinguished in appearance, in manner, and utterance, indicating thereby, even to the most obtuse, the blueness of his blood and the antiquity of his descent. For the Von Jagows have been nobles since the eleventh century, constitute a very numerous and powerful clan of the Brandenburg patriciate, and received at the time of the first crusade, the armorial device of a six-spoked red wheel on a silver shield, which they bear to this day.

Von Jagow was credited prior to the war, by the Pan-German, pro-war, and anti-British party at Berlin, with lack of force and vigor of character. It was said that he would become a mere passive instrument in the hands of the Kaiser, subservient to all the latter's whims and caprices, no matter how dangerous. On the other hand, it must be remembered that he belongs to the school of Prince Buelow, whom he served as the most devoted of private secretaries, and from whom he received his training.

Von Buelow, it may be remembered, resigned, just because of his independence, his lack of subserviency to the Emperor, and his refusal to subordinate his own views and prejudices to his sovereign's wishes. Von Jagow received his university training at Bonn, where he belongs to the same student society, the Borussia, to which the Kaiser and Von Bethmann-Hollweg, also belonged, and which is credited with ultra-conservatism.

FIGHTING NEAR TROY

Strange Contrasts Seen Where Allies Stormed Old Gallipoli

From where Helen saw and watched the brass-clad Greeks land from their beaked ships we gaze across the Hellespont to the newest picture of war. War is a story little changed in 3,000 years. Below, across old Skamander's marshes, is Kum Kale. What was an old fort is now a battered outline of stone. The houses are jumbled heaps of rock and plaster. From out there shines the glittering eye of a Turkish heliograph. Beyond this flashing signal is the Hellespont, with Seddul Bahr, a jutting yellow ridge that cuts the blue surrounding seas. Spotting the seas are a dozen ships. A two-funnelled grey-black battleship, with spreading fighting-tops, is the master vessel. Each ship is in a fever of activity. Line after line of ship's boats pass and re-pass between the group of vessels and the beach at the base of the cliff.

Dut Ousted By Money

Thousands of Italians have settled in the manufacturing town of Wuerttemberg since the war began. They replaced the German workingmen who are now at the front in France and Poland in the factories and are paid higher wages than they ever expected. When Italy declared war against Austria most of these immigrants were called home for military duty, but many ignored the mobilization order. They have now received a second call to the colors, but still they stay, although they know that very severe punishment awaits them if they evade their military duty.

Wearing collars which squeeze the neck tightly is said to be conducive to baldness.

The word "Whig" means a pack-saddle thief, the word "Tory" a band of robbers.

Lullington Church, Sussex, is the smallest in England. It is just sixteen feet square.

"Does the course of true love never run smooth?" "Only when neither party has enough to marry anybody else, or both have so much they've got to marry each other."

Got There Strong.

"My dear, these are very strong cigars you bought for me."

"Well, the man asked if I wanted 'em strong. Naturally I thought you would prefer something strong and durable. But that's just like a man. Next time I'll get 'em weak and see if that will suit you."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Pretty Hopeful.

"I like the way Fairleigh faces things. He's so wonderfully hopeful."

"Hopeful! I should say he was. What do you suppose he's doing now?"

"Dunno."

"Why, he's getting up a program for the celebration of the anniversary of the first hundred years of universal peace."—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

A Matter of Sentiment.

"The artist who painted that picture never could have gotten such a price from you as you paid the dealer."

"Of course not," replied Mr. Cumrox, "I have some professional pride of my own. If somebody gets a good bargain out of me I at least want the satisfaction of knowing it was another business man."—Washington Star.

How He Got It.

"Say, pop, may I have another piece of cake?"

"Yes, Bobby, if you won't tell your mother."

(An interval of mastication.)

"Pop, may I have another piece of cake?"

"No."

"Then I'll tell mamma."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Old Enough.

"I understand Miss Whatyoumaycall is going to have a birthday party this evening," the fat plumber observed.

"Yep," answered the thin carpenter, "I've been invited."

"Did she keep her last birthday?"

"Yes; and I'll tell you in confidence I don't believe she ever intends to let go of it."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Tough on the Joker.

The contributor wrote a joke about a plumber whose bills were always normal. "That," said the editor, rejecting it, "is not a joke; it's simply a lie."

The contributor tried again with a story of the plumber whose charges left nothing to be desired on the score of size. "That," said the editor, who had suffered, "is not a lie. Neither is it a joke."—London Scraps.

The Poorest Scholar Imaginable.

The other day a professor leaving the university was approached by a seedy individual, who pathetically asked:

"Won't you help a poor scholar with a dime?"

The coin bestowed, the learned man said:

"You tell me you are a poor scholar?"

"Sure," answered the other. "I never went to school in me life. So long."

The "Blue Foot."

Although not so prominent in Teutonic folklore as the hare, the fox is still looked upon as a mystic animal throughout Sweden and north Germany. In many districts reynard has long been regarded by the peasants as so sacred that his name must not be pronounced, and he is alluded to by some such euphemistic title as "blue foot" or "he who goes to the forest."

Beginning of English Snuff Taking.

The battle of Vigo bay, fought in 1702, led to the adoption of the snuff taking habit in England. After defeating the combined French and Spanish fleets, Sir George Rooke, the English commander, sacked the town of Vigo, the booty including several thousand barrels of the finest snuff. Although smoking was then firmly established in England snuff was almost unknown, but when this enormous quantity was thrown on the market at a low price it was bought out of curiosity by all sorts and conditions of men. The novelty caught on so well that for the next 100 years the English snuffed far more tobacco than they smoked.—London Chronicle.

A Wave of Water.

There is no necessary connection between the advance of a wave and the forward movement of the water composing it, as may be seen by running the fingers along the keys of a piano. An inverted wave travels along, but the keys merely move up and down. Similarly a wave may often be observed running along the ripe ears of golden grain, while the stalks are firmly rooted in the soil. The onward progress of a sea wave is easily perceptible, and by watching some light substance floating on the surface the fact is revealed that the water is not moving with the same velocity.—Chambers' Journal.

Clear Waste.

"He has a quick temper, you know," was the excuse given by a friend for a boy's rude act.

"Is he quick at his lessons?" was the question.

"No," was the reply.

"Is he quick at sports?" the questioner went on.

Again the answer was "No."

"Is he quick in obedience?"

"No."

"Well," said the questioner, with a twinkle in his eye, "if he has so little quickness he'd better use it where it will do him some good. It's just clear waste to put it on his temper."—Exchange.

Plain Horse Sense.

If a merchant or a manufacturer is willing to spend good money for advertising, to ask you to try his store or his product, it stands to reason that he must have something worth offering. Otherwise you would not go back, or you would not again purchase the product, and the first sale would be the last. In that case advertising would NOT pay. It only pays when it brings continuous patronage, and to do that there must be real value given. That is the reason advertised stores or products are almost invariably good. It will pay you to patronize the advertisers.

GERMANS RENEW ATTACKS ON WESTERN FRONT

The Russians Find It Necessary To Evacuate Vilna

GERMANS CONTINUE ATTACKS ON THE FRENCH POSITIONS

French Machine Guns Maintained a Steady Fire Along the Entire Front, Repulsing Every Attack---Crown Prince's Army Has Suffered Severe Losses---Grand Duke Nicholas Finds it Necessary to Evacuate Vilna.

BRITISH STEAMERS HAVE BEEN SUNK

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 13.—(French Official Communique).—Undismayed by the severe losses, the Crown Prince's army has resumed the attempt to batter a gap in the French lines in the western Argonne.

The Germans continued their attacks throughout yesterday, making their way close to the French trenches through old communication works, and then attempting to swarm over the parapets.

French machine guns maintained a steady fire along the entire front, repulsing every attack.

The communique reported the repulse of other assaults by use of bombs and grenades last night.

In Artois the Germans made a fruitless attack on the French positions north of Chateau Carleul.

GENEVA, via Berlin, Aug. 13.—French papers received here today report that the Grand Duke Nicholas, commanding the Russian armies, has reported to the Allies that he finds it necessary to evacuate Vilna because of the rapid progress of the Germans through the Courland and Kovno regions.

A VIGOROUS OFFENSIVE.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Movements overshadowing in importance even the operations in Poland are being made in the Balkan theatre of the war.

British operations against the Dardanelles and Austro-German threats against Serbia are beginning to evolve themselves into a race for the support of the Balkan States.

The Balkan situation at present dominates all others in all the capitals of Europe.

Everything points to a vigorous offensive by the Austro-Germans against Serbia at an early date, with the object of crushing the Serbian army, in order to force Bulgaria to give free passage to Teuton forces needed for the relief of Constantinople.

In order to defeat the Germans at their own plan, the allies on Gallipoli have commenced a tremendous offensive against the Turks in a desperate effort to smash the Dardanelles before Germany can throw an army through Serbia. More than 50,000 fresh troops have been landed on Gallipoli within the last week, and their appearance has heralded a violent drive on the entire front. Still more reinforcements, both French and British, are semi-officially reported en route for the straits.

Demands for the opening of a path to Turkey are being voiced in Berlin, and proclamations that Germany is preparing to send an army to aid the Turks are being spread broadcast in Constantinople, according to advices received here.

BRITISH STEAMERS SUNK.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The 600-ton British steamer Summerheld was sunk to-day by a German submarine.

Two more small British vessels, the Jacona and the Osprey, were other submarine victims to-day. Despatches to Lloyd's say the crew of the Jacona was rescued.

ENGLISH EAST COAST WAS RAIDED BY GERMAN AIRCRAFT

Six Persons Were Killed and Twenty-three Injured---One Zeppelin Reported to Have Been Damaged--Second Raid Within a Week---The Victims Were All Civilians

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The English east coast was again raided by German aircraft last night. Six persons were killed and twenty-three injured, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. One report says one Zeppelin was damaged.

Following the usual custom, the Admiralty withheld the news of the exact locality raided.

This is the second air raid on London this week. Late on Monday night and early on Tuesday a German air squadron raided the British east coast, killing fourteen persons and wounding the same number, one of the Zeppelins in the party being brought down and destroyed near Ostend.

The aircraft evidently appeared on the English coast at about dusk. The official statement from the Admiralty timed the raid at "Yesterday evening and last night."

The official statement said: "Two Zeppelins, between 9.30 and 11.30 last night, visited the east coast, dropping incendiary bombs, killing four men and two women, and injuring three men, eleven women and nine children. The victims were civilians.

"Fourteen houses were seriously damaged by the bombs. The Zeppelins were engaged at some points by our forces but escaped. One Zeppelin, however, was probably damaged."

Last night's raid brings the total victims of German air attacks on the English cities since the war began to 70 killed and 231 wounded.

Bodies of 30 Women In a German Trench

In another cheery letter to his brother, Albert, Gunner Ambrose Doris says Peterborough battery men are looking forward to another winter's operations. Already the evenings are becoming cool, but he writes that after Salisbury Plains they are prepared for the most disagreeable weather.

Gunner Doris is in excellent physical condition, his nerves unshaken and, he writes, he has a great deal to be thankful for. A few days before his letter was written it was reported by infantrymen who had taken a German trench that the British had found the dead bodies of thirty women. The anger of the men on making this discovery was awful.

TEAMSTER FINED FOR PASTURING HORSE AT SCHOOL

Sequel to a Long List of Complaints Originating From King Edward Park and Also the King Edward School

TO-DAY'S POLICE COURT

For pasturing a horse on the property of the King Edward School, a south end teamster was fined one dollar and costs, amounting in all to three dollars and sixty cents. Evidence was submitted by Walter Avery, the caretaker of the property, to the effect that he had frequently complained of the damage that had resulted to the lawn by reason of the horses that were allowed to run at large. In this particular case the horse was tied to the fence of the playground. The caretaker swore that in order to get to this fence it was necessary to cross the lawn whereas the defendant said that he led the horse on the cement sidewalk.

FIVE DOLLARS AND COSTS

"We are taking the cheapest way we can to teach you the law and impress it upon your mind," was the sage piece of advice that Magistrate Dumble handed out to A. E. Graham, in addition to a fine of five dollars and costs for cutting a street corner with an automobile.

P. C. Dickson swore that while on point duty at the corner of Charlotte and George street an automobile driven by Graham was proceeding north on George street. At the intersection it turned west on Charlotte street cutting between the constable and the south curb instead of going around on the north side. Graham, who conducts a livery in Lakefield, said he had just driven in from Buckhorn and drunk in a public place. He was not in a position to say how close or how far away he was from the curb.

BROKE A WINDOW

George Walker, late of Toronto, pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk in a public hotel. He was fined two dollars. It was also stated that he broke a plate glass window belonging to the Dickson Company and valued at forty dollars. It was left with the company to institute proceedings in respect to the window that was broken. Walker claimed he was out of work—a remark which caused the court to comment upon Walker's action in getting drunk.

The company's excursion steamer Stoney Lake is to be in commission to run an excursion to Healey Falls and Trent Bridge on Wednesday next, 18th August, leaving George Street Wharf at 7.30 a.m. and Street Railway Wharf at 7.55. The Trent Bridge Regatta is slated for that day, which increases the attractions of the trip. Meals served on board the steamer. Fare for the round trip, only 75c—just about half rates. 4-1-36

Dr. Clinton makes periodical trips to Peterborough and the surrounding towns for the purpose of familiarizing himself with sanitary conditions. While in the city he called at the office of Sanitary Inspector Spence and was informed that the latter was away on his holidays.

Flurry In the Wheat Market

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Wheat opened down to-day as the result of the publication of the stories of the cancellation of wheat contracts for shipment to the Allies.

September wheat lost one point at the opening over Thursday's close and in fifteen minutes had lost an additional 1 7-8 cents. December wheat lost 2 1-4 cents on the start and regained 1-4 cent in fifteen minutes. Other gains were weak in sympathy. Fifteen minutes after the market opened September wheat was at $1.09 1-8, and December, $1.07 1-4.

STILL WAITING FOR THE WORD FROM OTTAWA

Local Recruiting League Held Another Meeting Last Night—Work at Armouries Continues Steadily

A ROAD MARCH TO-DAY

At another well attended meeting of the general committee of the Speakers' Patriotic League last night, the ball was still kept rolling. No news of any definite nature was received concerning the proposed local regiment. But a good deal of routine work was done in the way of promoting recruiting conditions and results. Another recruiting band concert will be held to-night in Victoria Park, as noted elsewhere.

Eight of the thirty-two artillery recruits are undergoing treatment in the hospital for varicose veins. The expense of the operation is almost certain to be borne by the Government.

Sergt. Hart took the infantry detachment out for a short route march this morning. The men made a good appearance in their light summer uniforms.

If there were uniforms for them the artillery recruits would present a strong appeal to others. The conspicuous red band on the sweater sleeves is a badge of honor but it lacks the effect of the khaki.

A number of prominent men have been busy among the new recruits. If the Canadian Militia is to emulate the generosity of other Ontario cities every man enlisting would be insured at the city's expense for $1,000.00. As it is the men who "muster themselves" pay the regular premium and the special war premium. The irony of it is the fact that recruits paying to insure themselves are actually a form of insurance for those who stay at home.

Chas. Cook of Patterson street, a veteran of the Burman and Indian frontier campaigns, has signed up with Lieut. Hamilton's artillery squad, and is proving a useful man in the preliminary drill. He was born in Leicestershire 68 years ago but now is a thorough Canadian in the place line.

An officer of considerable experience remarked yesterday that quite a number of men have actually offered without cost to enlist if they get a commission. In their words they want to be officers with the alternative of remaining at home. The speaker pointed out that it cost him a good deal of money to get his present rank and he was not in a position to give his services for the other kind. He had served two years in regiments where promotions be added when the pot could not and could not to pay the price, and yet it these fellows who formerly stood at the militia who now refused to enlist because they could become commissioned officers.

They had the privilege of paying large sums of money were mere youths but they deserved to dawdle a swagger cane instead of the plain stick. At the same time when one chap goes after a commission it is only natural to expect that others of his acquaintance will desire the same rank. The officer who mentioned this condition remarked that many of these men would not make capable non-coms. and he wondered why so many of them who desire to make good if they enlisted did not keep a sergeant's stick in view. This is another subject of some of the recruiting difficulties that have to be met and before the resources of the community for can be prepared in anything like real proportion.

"TO BE WORTHY OF FREEDOM

(SAID SIR WILFRID LAURIER)

WE'VE GOT TO FIGHT FOR IT"

At Big Mass Meeting at Sherbrooke Que. Last Night—Supports Government War Policy and Appeals to French Canadians For Their Full Measure of Assistance.

SIR WILFRID HELPS RECRUITING.

SHERBROOKE, Que., Aug. 12.—Following his speech at St. Lin last Saturday, which resulted in a big spurt in the recruiting of the French Canadian regiments in the Province of Quebec, Sir Wilfrid Laurier addressed two mass meetings at Sherbrooke to-night, and, speaking in English and in French, he urged Canadians of all origins to rally round the armed forces of the Empire. "Canadians must be prepared to meet the sacrifices of a two years' war," he declared. "This should be the spirit of our people. We must be prepared to meet reverses, but we must keep our teeth set and win."

Duty of French-Canadians.

Addressing himself particularly to the French Canadian element in the audience, Sir Wilfrid said he wanted them to fully understand what he thought their attitude should be in the present conflict.

"I affirm it with all my power," he declared, "that it is the duty of Canada to give to Great Britain in this war all the assistance that is in the power of Canada. My confidence in the present Government at Ottawa does not ooze from the soles of my boots, but at the outbreak of the war I considered it my duty to support it in its war policy. I have supported it in that policy ever since, and I will support it again. The reason is that this war is a contest between German institutions and British institutions. British institutions mean freedom. German institutions mean despotism. That is why we as Canadians have such a vital interest in this war.

Freedom Under British Flag.

"I speak here to-night," he continued, "as a Canadian of French origin, and I want to say to my fellow countrymen of French blood that if we are as free as we are at the present time it is because we live under the shadow of the British flag. (Cheers.) It is under British institutions that men have found the greatest measure of liberty. British subjects all over the world, whether they be of English, Scotch, Irish or French or any other parentage, are all out in this contest, and we will pledge our word that we will not lay down our arms until the cause of the allies triumphs.

"I am an old man," he went on amid the great enthusiasm, "but rather than see Belgium sacrificed, France inundated and Britain humiliated and the world subjected to the domination of Germany, I pray to God that in His mercy He will not let me see that day, but it is not my death that I am looking for, and I am thankful to my Maker that He has still given me strength enough to fight this battle.

Will Do What He Can.

"I have a young man, and I had no doubt that I have now, and which I did not take with me because I could not bear to take to the trenches my little boy, but my little boy will follow in my footsteps as far as he is able, and when I am laid in my grave I will be able to say that I have done what I could, and that I have left behind me a country which I would have wished to find, but which I would have tried to make even more so.

Does Not Blame Britain.

In dealing with the cruel necessity of war, Sir Wilfrid pointed out that France was only half prepared at the time war broke out and Britain was only half prepared to send. Britain was not prepared at all. There are men who blame the British people for not being prepared, but I cannot see that Britain could prepare for war. Britain never fight until they have to fight, but when they do fight they have resolved. He pointed out that Britain owned a nation of shopkeepers, not a nation of soldiers and sailors, and he said: "It is because we are only shopkeepers that we have made ex-cuse Britain has accumulated wealth, and he said that wealth was the nerve of war. It is not to be pretended that the British people and British statesmen were so perfect but I have no hesitation in saying that there is no people on earth or country in which there more unselfishness can be found than in Britain's country."

High Tribute to Botha.

Sir Wilfrid paid a high tribute to General Botha, and said he wanted to tell the French Canadians what General Botha was doing in South Africa.

Speakers at To-night's Concert In Victoria Park

At the usual weekly band concert in Victoria Park this evening, Rev. James Rollins and Mr. R. J. Soden will be the speakers who will make addresses on behalf of recruiting. The programme by the band will be of a patriotic character and will include the patriotic songs of the Allies—selections by Mr. Loder on the English concertina, and by Mr. Robert Yeaman on the bag pipes.

Was Promised Reasonable Support

As a result of a trip made to Toronto by Mayor Butler and Ald. Green in connection with the matter of obtaining a legislative enactment to validate civic grant for military purposes, the city was promised reasonable support. A letter relating to the interview and the matter under discussion will be forwarded to the Council at an early date. Hon. W. J. Hanna assured Mayor Butler that the government was prepared to support the city's request to an reasonable extent.

While in Toronto the city officials waited upon the Hydro Electric Commission, where they were informed by the Commissioners intention to extend its lines to Peterborough for the purpose of preparing plans and specifications of a hydro-electric railway through adjoining townships.

ANOTHER WHIRL OF REID'S AUGUST CLEAN-UP SALE

Before the fall re-orders are placed, The Reid Co. have decided to stage another big whirl of their August clean-up sale. There can be no question about the statement that the firm means to sacrifice as the advertised goods are now only a fraction of their former value. To advertise properly, one is compelled to sacrifice a part of the profit—offer more than they expect—and we are opposed to that. We believe in keeping faith with the public, and we will not do it. We prefer to let the goods speak for themselves, and we will only say that the values we offer in this sale are unprecedented. Look up Sale announcement elsewhere in this issue.

A CALL FOR KAKHI.

As we investigate recruiting conditions, and delve under the surface and work on the surface to find causes that militate against recruiting, we discover many that need not be in existence. We invite recruits, and when we get them we find that we can't equip them—we have no or very few, uniforms. A man does not feel himself a soldier unless he has a uniform. He is not an attractive figure, nor an invitation to new recruits if he has only a red string round his arm with a label, "enlisted."

Ottawa's explanation of the shortage of uniforms is good in one way—it is said to be due to unusually large reiruiting. This is good, but not satisfactory. The uniform should await the recruit, not the recruit compel the uniform. The Ottawa authorities are not keeping step with the recruiting work. If men are ready to enter the ranks, the militia authorities should meet them at least half way—with the necessary equipment of uniforms, ready-to-wear, in other than the shopkeeping sense.

We don't want to captiously criticise the Minister of Militia; his absence from the country at the present time may be for a good purpose. It may be for strategical reasons, but what is the use of discussing strategy if we neglect the very basis, the sole justification, of strategy, the prompt presence of soldiers in the field ready to be instruments in the considerations of strategy and fighting. We can warrantably tell the Minister of Militia that his presence here is needed now. We need his personal energy, his fire, and his personal example and influence, to stir up the officials and quicken the machinery of the Militia Department. Those who have dug into the question know that there are many hindrances to recruiting that can be removed by the department; and to secure these things the presence of the head of the department is needed.

Recruiting and fighting are things upon which we cannot generalize; we find by actual experienc in Peterborough, that we must, in the language of the street, "get down to brass tacks." To get the best results from recruiting appeals we must meet, half way, at least, the gallant fellows that enlist. If we invite men to fight, we must be ready with the equipment. We might make a bon-fire of a large amount of red tape instead of using it to decorate the arms of recruits in lieu of uniforms.

THE ONLY PRICE OF PEACE.

The peace proposals emanating entirely from Germany, and made extensively in the pro-German press on this continent, are either an evidence, that Germany has had enough of the war, or that she is seeking success otherwise than by straight fighting according to the rules of civilized warfare. In either event the situation is encouraging as showing that Germany is not able to bludgeon her way to victory as she hoped to do at the outset of her assault on civilization and the better things that civilization stands for. She has sought vainly to detach Russia from the Entente. This attitude is in striking and significant contrast to the attitude assumed when Berlin, Petrograd and London, were the declared, hoped for, and possible goals of German aggression. It encourages the Entente Allies to greater efforts, and strengthens their determination to make no peace except that dictated to a beaten enemy by the great custodians of the interests of freedom and humanity. There will be no peace till the power of Germany, her ability, to implement her devilish doctrine of force and satiate her inhuman lust for world domination, is neutralized.

Thus, the war must go on, and if all the resources of Britain and her allies are needed, they must be brought into play, or rather work. Germany is still strong and will take a deal of beating yet. In the present outlook there is still danger from the strength and resourcefulness of Germany. If this is not met by superior strength and resourcefulness Germany will win; and if she wins there is an end to our liberty and the conditions of the beautiful life we have grown so accustomed to under civilization.

If the dream of world domination of the Hun is realized, it will mean world domination, and Canada, in her turn, will know what Attila, "the scourge of God," meant to eastern Europe in days gone by. The gone-by days will, unless prevented, be restored by the modern Hun, as vicious and a more-to-be dreaded scourge than the Huns of the middle of the fifth century, because they have prostituted the forces of science, to the frightfulness and effectiveness of their hateful cult of force and diabolical cunning.

To avert this result needs only the full strength and cooperation of those who would preserve their own liberty, and safeguard the interests of universal humanity. Every available man in Canada is needed in the fighting line. The sooner the forces of the Empire and the Entente Allies are brought into action, the sooner the dreadful carnage will cease; the sooner will the conditions return when we can apply ourselves without distraction, to the pursuits of our peaceful lives, and of the national and individual happiness that can only come from the full enjoyment of British liberty and the fruits of its possession.

If we can bring ourselves to realize the situation, to realize the dangers, to realize out duty; our duty will urge us to the action desired.

One, and the one chief way to avert the danger, to enlist our cooperation, is for every able-bodied and eligible Canadian to join the fighting ranks. The appeal comes to all; for all are concerned, and will be affected by the outcome, for good or for evil. In the human economy it is imperative that the strong shall protect and support the weak. The strong are the young and robust manhood of Canada, and to them the call comes. And they will not have to fight alone. Those they leave behind will back them and support them, and if the response to the recruiting call is up to the mark, with the cooperation of those left behind, we shall realize the condition of a nation in arms. All will be fighting either in the ranks of war or in the fighting ranks at home.

None of us can talk, or even think of peace, that will not be permanent; and no peace will be permanent that is not founded upon the ruins of militarism. The price of peace, and the only price, is the destruction of militarism. Your duty is plain; enlist now; not somebody else, but YOU.

LAURIER AND THE FADDISTS.

In regard to a proposal that involves the removal of self-government from the Dominions of the Empire, the Toronto Star has the following to say:

> At the Imperial Conference of 1911 Sir Wilfrid Laurier opposed certain faddists who wanted to tinker with the constitution of the British Empire. The most notable of these proposals was a plan for creating a new Parliament or Government at Westminster with power to tax Canada and the other colonies. The fad was denounced not only by Sir Wilfrid, but by almost every other member of the Conference, and especially and most forcibly by Mr. Asquith, who said that it would greatly embarrass the British Empire and strike at the principle of responsibility.
>
> Because Sir Wilfrid Laurier helped to defend British institutions from the itnkers, the Telegram says that "the proceedings of the Imperial Conference of 1911 exhibited Sir Wilfrid Laurier as a querulous, almost churlish critic, whose whole duty it was to protect Canadian autonomy against imaginary peril from Downing Street."
>
> The peril was "imaginary" only because experienced statesmen would have nothing to do with the proposed novelty. The man who defends autonomy defends British institutions.

Self-government is what makes Canada and the other Dominions, the right hand of Great Britain, as the centre of the Empire. It creates a spirit of independence and self-reliance, and of cooperative action that could not exist if the Dominions were reduced to the status of vassal states. It makes them one as defenders of the Empire, in that they have something worth defending — their own individual existence as self-governing countries, and the conditions such a relation to the Empire represents. We couldn't be better than we are, an example of the triumph of the liberty the British constitution guarantees—a liberty that makes for unity, and through unity, strength.

GOLD MOVEMENTS.

The shipping of $52,000,000 in gold from Britain to New York via Halifax has provided the American papers with quite a little sensation. Since the war began, however, a much larger sum in the total has been sent from New York to Canada—no less an amount, in fact, than 138 million dollars. All this has been borrowed by Canada—to the mutual benefit of the United States, which knows Canada and has confidence in it, and to Canada, which needs capital for development and cannot now get it from Europe.

WHAT ONE WOMAN DID.

Among the most entertaining features of the short and terrific campaign in Manitoba were the brilliant speeches by Mrs. Nellie L. McClung, which contributed in no small degree to the defeat of Sir James Aikins, the Conservative leader, in Brandon, and his first lieutenant, W. H. Sharpe in Manitou. Mrs. McClung devoted her attention especially to these two constituencies, and was heard by cheering thousands. Reports of her addresses were given columns in the leading papers. Her native wit, her effective points, her cutting irony and her apt stories found a ready response in the vast audiences which instinctively showed their admiration of a good, clever and courageous woman.

Sir James Aikins had expressed his objections to woman suffrage, but in a campaign such as that just closed the "outs" were prepared to promise anything to anybody. Thus, when the Conservatives came along and promised woman suffrage, all Mrs. McClung could say was, "This is so sudden."

This talented lady speaker was one who gave her whole-hearted support to the Conservatives sixteen years ago, when they promised the Macdonald Liquor Act, and she had been one of those who sang the Doxology when it passed. "How sorry the angels must be for us," she said in one address last week. Sir James Aikins promised, if he got in, to see that the act was enforced. It was a death bed repentance, following sixteen years of sin. Mrs. McClung certainly won the D.S.O. in the Manitoba campaign.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

COME ON LADS

Don't you hear the bugle calling,
Don't you hear the rattling drums?
Don't you hear the pibroch wailing?
Can't you hear the sound of guns?

Can't you see those murdered babies,
Can't you hear the mother's moan?
Can't you see those blackened ruins,
Which somebody called his home?

Can't you see the graves of comrades,
In the lily fields of France?
Can't you see those hero prisoners,
Who are calling you, perchance?

Can't you see where duty calls you,
Can't you see the chance you miss?
Won't you rather have the cheering,
Would you rather hear the hiss?

Don't you know your country needs you,
Have you no red blood on tap?
Don't you want to mark your manhood,
Or do you not care a rap?

Has the blood of your forefathers
Turned to water in your veins?
Would you like the term "a coward"
Stuck forever to your names?

Won't you fight for God and country,
Won't you hark to freedom's call?
For God's sake, join the colours;
Don't let others do it all.

Then help in the world's remaking,
Your name on the roll of fame;
Hunt up a recruiting sergeant
And proudly hand him your name.

The lads who have gone before you,
Whom Canada gave as toll,
Yes, their names will live forever,
As men with God-given soul.

Help Britain to crush the tyrant,
To close his blaspheming lip;
Come on and avenge the children,
Come on, lads, and "do your bit."

TRAGIC ROMANCE COMES TO A CLOSE

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 13—The battle for the possession of Warsaw brought to a close the tragic romance of Princess Sophia, only daughter of Prince Wilhelm of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach and Baron Hans Victor von Bleichroeder. The son of the famous German banker was killed while fighting before Warsaw on August 1. He was at one time engaged to Princess Sophia, who committed suicide in September, 1913, when her father, Prince Wilhelm, refused to consent to their marriage.

First news of the Baron's death was received here last night from Berlin. He was killed, it is stated, in the last days of the storming of the Polish capital, less than two years after his sweetheart shot herself at her father's castle in Heidelburg because she could not wed him. He was even barred from her funeral by members of her family.

Grand Duke Ernst of Saxe-Weimar was said to have been responsible for preventing the wedding of the Princess to the banker's son. He was head of the house, and although her father was almost induced to permit the match the Grand Duke refused to allow it unless Princess Sophia renounced all her titles. This she refused to do. Her father was unable to take a stand for his daughter because of his financial relations with the Grand Duke.

A RALLYING CALL

Tune—"Scots wha hae wi' Wallace Bled"

Let me like a soldier die,
The coward Knave I pass by,
Liberty is sweet, oh my,
Give me liberty.
No Briton will be a slave,
Rather fill a soldier's grave;
Liberty, all Britons crave,—
God's sweet liberty.

See, little Belgium state
Over-run by German hate,
Britons will not tolerate
Such knavish trickery.
See the German tyranny,
Louvain, horrid massacre,
Brave Belgium must be free,
Give her liberty.

Four hundred million souls,
Britons' Empire now controls,
All blooming like marigolds
Godly liberty.
All are fighting for the free,
The world wide sweet liberty,
Over land, and over sea,
Godly liberty.

Britons' Empire need not fear,
While her soldiers volunteer,
Fighting for their homes so dear,—
Godly liberty.
Man can go to Heaven or hell.
Godly freedom will excel,
Soldiers do your duty well,
Death or liberty!

18th Aug., 1915. —An Old Soldier

THE MINSTREL BOY.

The minstrel boy to the war is gone,
In the ranks of death you'll find him,
His father's sword he has girded on,
And his wild harp slung behind him,
"Land of song," said the warrior bard,
"Though all the world betray thee,
One sword, at least, thy right shall guard,
One faithful harp shall praise thee."

The minstrel fell, but the foeman's chain
Could not bring his proud soul under;
The harp he loved ne'er spoke again,
For he tore its chords asunder;
And said: "No chains shall sully thee,
Thou soul of love and bravery;
Thy songs were made for the pure and free,
They shall never sound in slavery."

MOORE.

A LEGEND OF THE RHINE

(German bakers are now producing cakes with "Gott strafe England" on them.)

Young Heinrich at the age of ten,
An off-spring of the Huns,
Joined manly hate of Englishmen
With childish love of buns;
And so it filled him with delight
When bakeries divulged
A plan whereby those passions might
Be both at once indulged.

In fervent love of Fatherland
Young Heinrich swiftly bake
The patriotic dough nut and
The loyal currant cake;
To guard his hate from growing less
Through joy at this repast
He saved precocious thoroughness!
The "strafe" bits till last.

Alack, his well-intentioned cram
Cost little Heinrich dear;
Disorder in the diaphragm
Concluded his career:
To find out why he passed away
They bade the doctor come,
And "strafe England," so they say
Was printed on his tum.

Never Again Will England Leave All to Sentiment.

London, Aug. 12 (By mail.) The Dean of Durham does not believe that the war will result in general disarmament and universal peace, "when the war drum throb no longer and the battle flags are furled." In an address at West Hartlepool he predicted that in England the certain consequence of the war would be "the universal obligation to military service on the Swiss model.

"Never again," he said, "can we run the risk of having the whole fortunes of our land and Empire left to voluntary effort, however widely distributed and magnificently rendered."

2,000 DESERT GERMAN ARMY, FRENCH REPORT

N.Y. American and London Daily Telegraph Exclusive Cable Service.

Havre, Aug. 13. —The number of German deserters who escaped into Holland during June is estimated at more than 2,000. Near Stekene an entire company under arms, with officers and non-commissioned officers, crossed the frontier and surrendered to Dutch soldiers.

In fifteen days fifty German soldiers, having learned they were to be sent to the front, surrendered to Dutch guards.

French Grenade Throwers Well Protected Against Shrapnel and Gas.— A special mask preventing the inhaling of gas along with a steel helmet and a bullet proof waistcoat, makes up the protection a French grenade thrower wears. Picture shows Frenchmen in the act of throwing the deadly grenade against the enemy's lines.

POPULAR PSYCHOLOGY OF SOME EUROPEAN PEOPLES

Writing from Paris to the Chicago Tribune, Robert Herrick comments as follows on some of the national characteristics witnessed in Europe under the strain of the past year;

THE FRENCH.

The French are a surprise even to themselves. The popular idea of the French character in America has been that of a somewhat absurd, affected, voluble, theatrical people, easy to ridicule in farce. The French were supposed to be light minded, frivolous, and of course immoral. Yet we find them fighting this most sordid of wars in grim silence, the least talkative, the coolest of all the combatants—cheerful, to be sure, with an unshakable optimism and a religious belief in the goodness of their cause, in the justice of God. Anything but frivolous or weak! Rather with a silent, serious tenacity that bodes ill for those across the Rhine, who with all the rest of the world have been deceived by false popular psychology of French character.

The Germans utterly misread the French character. Now they know what the French are after ten months of dreary trench warfare, during which the frivolous little men have defied their biggest efforts to break through. They know that the French are cheerfully preparing for another winter in the trenches, and as many as may be necessary. No, after this, nobody will speak of the French as "light" or "frivolous." The entire world, including the enemies, takes off its hat to the gallant, patient French.

RUSSIA.

We know much less about Russian character. In America we are especially vague about Russia. But those of us who read Russian literature have been astonished by the steadfastness of Russia displayed in her reverses. For the national character has been described by her own writers, including the great master, Tolstoi, as being almost morbidly sensitive to discouragement, with unstable temperaments like the Celts, planning grandly in words, but giving up at the first difficulties, enervated by their own words. One would have expected them after the failure of the year's campaigns to be looking for peace with Germany, which could be had, no doubt, on very favourable terms. What do we find instead? After the worst drubbing that any armies have got in this bloody war, they are still stubbornly fighting on, with never a suggestion of relaxe will, never a thought of making terms selfishly to avoid the drain of a war in which most of the fighting seems to fall to them. After a year of losses and defeats Russia is as steady as a rock. Literally she does not seem to know when she is beaten, and such an enemy must be hard to beat. No, the Slav can no longer be called wayward or fickle. Russia needs a new poet to explain to us the mystery of her great, hidden soul.

THE ITALIANS.

Then, again, there is Italy. The Italian nature has been supposed to be treacherous, highly excitable, but a flash in the pan, with none of the firm resolution, the patient preparation necessary to carry large undertakings to a successful issue. Popularly Italians have played the roles of mountebanks and villains. As for her treacherous nature, Italy did break with her former allies—an alliance which was both secret and purely political. But she did it honourably, after due notice, according to the terms of the agreement. She tore up her scrap of paper after observing all the formalities required in such cases of international divorce. Germany, after violating a contract to which she was a party by an immediate invasion of an innocent and helpless nation, shows little sense of humour in denouncing the treachery of Italy, who broke in due form an agreement that was valid merely during the pleasure of both parties.

As for precipitancy, Italy carefully prepared herself for war for eight months, even holding back at the very end the meeting of her parliament another ten days because the army was not quite in position. Having got herself thoroughly ready for her large job, she has gone at the business with all the precise deliberation of working at an engineering problem. And she has not allowed herself to be distracted from her prime objective by invitations to embark on the allies' venture in the Dardanelles, with all sorts of tempting bait held out to her for her co-operation. After this we shall have to think of the Italian as shrewd and hard headed as a Yankee farmer, as self-controlled as an oriental.

LASTLY, THE HUNS.

But of all the surprises which the war has presented in popular psychology, the relevations of the true German temperament has been the greatest. Not so much in its frank materialism, but in the extraordinary lack of self-control that Germans have displayed. English and Americans are taught to consider that an individual who cannot master his own temper himself is unfit to master others. Yet here is a people pretending to world rule whose tempers individually are so little under control that they explode in senseless passion on the least provocation. The Germans froth with hate, first against the English because they were not as cowardly as expected, then against the Italians because they would not listen to Prince von Bulow's song, now against the Americans because their government dares to question the divine right of Germany to do as she pleases.

Judging from the German press and from the talk of Germans whom I have met, the German nation is living in a ferment of rage all the more extraordinary as things seem to have been going their way in the field. What would happen to this uncontrolled people should the war take an unfavourable turn and not supply them with victories? Could they take steadily reverses such as the French and Russians have so calmly faced? They would go to pieces.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.
My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

Russians Are Superb in Hour of Trial

Correspondent Has Greater Admiration For the Czar's Soldiers Than Ever Before

WHY WARSAW WAS LOST

Petrograd, August 10—The Russian abandonment of Warsaw marks the end of one of the most remarkable campaigns in the world's history.

It is both stupid and unfair for the impartial observer to minimize the German campaign, the determination and the bravery of the German soldiers whose sacrifice during three months placed them in possession of the goal for which they probably suffered not far from 1,000,000 casualties.

The capture of Warsaw undoubtedly represents the greatest German achievement in the war. This must be admitted. But on the other hand it is equally stupid and unfair to magnify the importance of Warsaw.

WHY RUSSIANS LOST CITY.

The city has been lost not through defective generalship and not through the inferiority of the Russian army, but on account of one cause only, the inability of the Russian empire to convert quickly its vast resources for the purposes of war.

Personally, I have been in and out of Warsaw since the evacuation started and I am able to state without reservation there never has been the slightest confusion or panic on the roads as the result of the movement.

I was not in Warsaw when the last regiments crossed the river a short midnight and am unable to express an opinion of their condition or conduct but I saw the other units during the entire afternoon and can vouch they were neither demoralized nor discouraged, though they certainly were bitterly disappointed. None of those I talked with wanted peace but said Warsaw must be retaken and the Germans beaten.

If the Germans on the occupation of the city captured anything valuable I shall be greatly surprised as for two weeks an almost unint rupted train of transport, carrying the military effects, was strung out along the road in the rear in case that Warsaw would have to be given up.

THREE HOUR INTERMISSION

The bridges were blown up at three o'clock and to the best of my information the Germans arrived on the Warsaw side of the Vistula at 6, which certainly does not indicate close contact with the rear guard and much less the carrying of any part of the defences by storm. However, I do not wish to speak authoritatively for what happened after Wednesday night but by that time the Warsaw army was practically all out.

German hopes of causing a Russian disaster were lost. The allies can have the satisfaction of knowing that the Russians played their game practically up to the last minute, and the last round of shrapnel, and then retired in perfectly good order, leaving the Germans to enter the undefended city.

The armies throughout this movement acted on a symetrical plan, following a time table in conjunction with all Russian forces from Sokal and Galacia to Lomza in the north which enabled them to stay until the last, taking the maximum of toll from the Germans and still escape with the army intact and ready to fight again on the new chosen position.

If the Germans consider that by their capture of Warsaw they have struck a decisive blow at Russia they should recollect that after one year of exhausting warfare with its horrible losses and incredible sacrifices, they stand today practically at the same point from which Napoleon commenced his disastrous campaign for the invasion of Russia.

The Russian army will gladly fight on indefinitely. I am inclined to feel great admiration for the Russians today than ever before. In the hour of their successes in Galacia they were fine in the hour of their trials today they are superb. War is made by common soldiers, and as long as the mujik remains with his heart in the fight he will yet come into his own when the opportunity offers.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

We may now sum up and endeavour to explain the character and significance of the wrongful acts done by the German army in Belgium. If a line is drawn on a map from the Belgian frontier to Liege and continued to Charleroi, and a second line drawn from Liege to Malines, a sort of figure resembling an irregular Y will be formed. It is along this Y that most of the systematic (as opposed to isolated) outrages were committed. If the period from August 4th to August 30th is taken, it will be found to cover most of these organized outrages were committed. If the period from August 4th to August 30th is taken it will be found to cover most of these organized outrages. Termonde and Alost extend, it is true, beyond the Y lines, and they belong to the month of September. Murder, rape, arson, and pillage began from the moment when the German army crossed the frontier. For the first two weeks of the war the towns and villages near Liege were the chief sufferers. From the 19th of August to the end of the month, outrages spread in the directions of Charleroi and Malines, and reached their period of greatest intensity. There is a certain significance in the fact that outrages round Liege coincide with the unexpected resistance of the Belgian army in that district, and that the slaughter which reigned from the 19th August to the end of the month is contemporaneous with the period when the German army's need for quick passage through Belgium at all costs was deemed imperative. Here let a distinction be drawn between two classes of outrages.

Individual acts of brutality—ill-treatment of civilians, rape, plunder, and the like—were widely committed. These are more numerous and more shocking than would be expected in warfare between civilized Powers, but they differ rather in extent than in kind, from what has happened in previous though not recent wars. In all wars many shocking and outrageous acts must be expected, for in every large army there must be a proportion of men of criminal instincts whose worst passions are unloosed by the immunity which the conditions of warfare afford. Drunkenness, moreover, may turn even a soldier who has no criminal habits into a brute, who may commit outrages at which he would himself be shocked in his sober moments, and there is evidence that intoxication was extremely prevalent among the German army, both in Belgium and France, for plenty of wine was to be found in the villages and country houses which were pillaged. Many of the worst outrages appear to have been perpetrated by under influence of drink. Unfortunately little seems to have been done to repress this source of danger.

In the present war, however, and this is the greatest charge against the German army, the evidence shows that the killing of non-combatants was carried out to an extent for which no previous war between nations claiming to be civilized (for such cases as the atrocities perpetrated by the Turks on Bulgarian Christians in 1876, and on Armenian Christians in 1895 and 1896, do not belong to that category) furnishes any precedent. That this killing was done as part of a deliberate plan is clear from the facts hereinbefore set forth regarding Louvain, Aerschot, Dinant, and other towns. The killing was done under orders in each place. It began at a certain fixed date, and stopped (with some few exceptions) at another fixed date. Some of the officers who carried out the work did it reluctantly, and said they were obeying directions from their chiefs. The same remarks apply to the destruction of property. House-burning was part of the programme, and villages, even large parts of a city, were given to the flames as part of terrorizing policy. Citizens of neutral states who visited Belgium in December and January, report that the German authorities do not deny that non-combatants were systematically killed in large numbers during the first weeks of the invasion, and this, so far as we know, has never been officially denied. If it were denied, the flight and continued voluntary exile of thousands of Belgian refugees would go far to contradict a denial, for there is no historical parallel in modern times for the flight of a large part of a nation before an invader. The German Government have, however, sought to justify their severities on the grounds of military necessity, and have excused them as retaliation for cases in which civilians fired on German troops. There may have been cases in which such firing occurred, but no proof has ever been given, or, to our knowledge, attempted to be given, of such cases, nor of the shocking outrages perpetrated by Belgian men and women on German soldiers.

The inherent improbability of the German contention is shown by the fact that after the first few days of the invasion every possible precaution had been taken by the Belgian authorities, by way of placards and handbills, to warn the civilian population not to intervene in hostilities. Throughout Belgium steps had been taken to secure the handing over of all firearms in the possession of civilians before the German army arrived. These steps were sometimes taken by the police and sometimes by the military authorities.

The invaders appear to have proceeded upon the theory that any chance shot coming from an unexpected place was fired by civilians. One favourite form of this allegation was that priests had fired from the church tower. In many instances the soldiers of the allied armies used church towers and private houses as cover for their operations. At Aerschot, where the Belgian soldiers were stationed in the church tower and fired upon the Germans as they advanced, it was at once alleged by the Germans when they entered the town and with difficult disproved, that the firing had come from civilians. Thus one elementary error creeps at once into the German argument, for they were likely to confound, and did in some instances certainly confound legitimate military operation with the hostile intervention of civilians.

Troops belonging to the same army often open fire by mistake upon each other. That the German army was no exception to this rule is proved not only by many Belgian witnesses but by the most irrefragable kind of evidence, the admission of German soldiers themselves recorded in their war diaries. Thus Otto Clepp, 2nd Company of the reserve, says, under date 22nd of August—"3 a.m. Two infantry regiments shot at each other, nine dead and 50 wounded, fault not yet ascertained." In this connection the diaries of Kurt Hoffman, and a soldier of the 112 Regiment (diary No. 14) will repay study. In such cases the obvious interest of the soldier is to conceal his mistake, and a convenient method of doing so is to raise the cry of "francs-tireurs." Doubtless the German soldiers often believed that the civilian population naturally hostile, had in fact attacked them. This attitude of mind may have been fostered by the German authorities themselves before the troops passed the frontier, and thereafter stories of alleged atrocities committed by Belgians upon Germans, such as the myth referred to in one of the diaries relating to Liege, were circulated among the troops and roused their anger.

The diary of Barth—when still in Germany on the 10th of August—shows that he believed that the Oberburgomaster of Liege had murdered a surgeon-general. The fact is that no violence was inflicted on the inhabitants at Liege until the 19th, and no one who studies these articles can have any doubt that Liege would have immediately been given over to murder and destruction if any such incident had occurred.

Letters written to their homes, which have been found on the bodies of dead Germans, bear witness, in a way that sounds pathetic, to the kindness with which they were received by the civil population. Their evident surprise at this reception was due to the stories which had been dinned into their ears of soldiers with their eyes gouged out, treacherous murders and poisoned food, stories which may have been encouraged by the higher military authorities in order to impress the mind of the troops as well as for the sake of justifying the measures which they took to terrify the civil population. If there is any truth in such stories, no attempt has been *made to establish it. For in*stance, the Chancellor of the German Empire in a communication made to the press on September 2nd, and printed in the "Nord Deutche Allgemeine Zeitung," on September 21st, said as follows: "Belgian girls gouged out the eyes of the German wounded. Officials of Belgian cities have invited our officers to dinner and shot and killed them across the table. Contrary to international law, the whole civilian population of Belgium was called out, and later having at first shown friendliness, carried on in the rear of our troops terrible warfare with concealed weapons. Belgian women cut the throats of soldiers whom they had quartered in their homes while they were sleeping." No evidence whatever seems to have been adduced to prove these tales, and though there may be cases in which individual Belgians fired on the Germans, the statement that "the whole civilian population of Belgium was called out" is utterly opposed to the fact.

PRINCESS VICTORIA, Artist in Miniature, to display Talent at Moose Jubilee.

PRINCESS VICTORIA ARTIST IN MINIATURE

To Display Talent at Moose Jubilee

For years the business men in the middle west have held annual celebrations of a week's duration, with carnival attractions, for the purpose of advertising the towns and booming them as trading points. Year after year the carnivals were held with increased attendance and better business for those who approached the situation properly. This involved the selection only of the better class of attractions.

Following this out, the Loyal Order of Moose, in the selection of a company for their jubilee week and carnival, went over the ground carefully and in selecting the Lewis-Meverhoff Shows United, secured the best to be had. Reports from Hamilton, where the show is on this week, and from Buffalo, where it appeared last week, are most flattering and support the claims of the managers that they have the best combination in the carnival field, the largest, most costly and elaborate in America.

The general manager, Victor D. Levitt, has had years of experience, and was the originator of the street fairs in this country years back. He had long experience in his native country England, before coming to this country. He has the endorsation of the leading Boards of Trade, business men's associations, fair presidents and secretaries all over the world. Mr Levitt has for this year's tour put together the largest, grandest, and most elaborate company ever. In magnitude it surpasses, in beauty it outshines, in straight, clean business principles in dealing with the public it predominates above all others. The company is carrying fifteen shows and attractions with several big astounding outside attractions. It requires sixty-four big specially constructed wagons, and forty sixty-foot steel cars to transport this organization.

When the band plays the opening session on Monday night, at the fair grounds, the people of Peterborough will witness one of the grandest week's entertainments in the history of the city. Strange people, new and old costumes from foreign lands, enchanting scenes, gorgeous electrical displays, glittering prismatic displays, and scores of new and novel high class amusements and devices to surprise and amuse the public will be in order of the six big days of celebration.

One of the features of the show will be the appearance of the Princess Victoria, one of the greatest artists in miniature. This tiny poem of loveliness will capture the audience from the moment of her entrance. 19 3-4 pounds in weight, 25 1-2 inches in height, and 23 years of age, comprises this essence of artistic beauty.

A feature of the entertainment of the Princess Victoria will be her wonderful personality, the organ tones, xylophone, sleigh bells and tubaphone, all being subject to the witchcraft of her mastery. Perhaps the most wonderful part of her performance are the selections on a full sized piano for the Princess possesses the smallest hands the world ever knew to play a full sized piano intelligently. Her hands are no larger than those of a child of six months old.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF TELEPHONE SERVICE

Is Suggested in a Resolution Forwarded to the Peterborough City Council

The appended resolution originating from Stamford, has been received by the City Council. No action was taken in connection with the matter referred to.

"That we, the Board of Trade of the Township of Stamford are of the unanimous opinion that the Telephone Systems of Ontario should be owned and operated by the Ontario Government, as they are in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in order that the citizens may get cheaper rates and better service; and, further, that we advise that the said telephone systems be bought at their physical valuation; or that the Ontario Government establish a system of its own and furnish service to the citizens at cost, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Premier of the Province."

JEAN DE RESZKE'S SON AT THE FRONT.

New York, Aug. 12.—Information received at the office of the American Polish Relief Committee indicates that Mr Jean de Reszke, Jr., the son of Mr Jean de Reszke, the famous Polish tenor, who for many years was connected with the Metropolitan Opera House, is now a quartermaster in the French army and is winning favourable comments for himself in that capacity. Mr de Reszke also is writing descriptive articles on camp life for the press of Paris.

TWO NEW DIRECTORS FOR THE UNION BANK

E. W. H. Blake, of Toronto, and R. O. McCulloch, of Galt, Now Identified With Canadian Financial Institution

The Union Bank of Canada, head office in this city, the president of which is John Galt, of Winnipeg, announces the election of two new directors. These directors will take the place of two gentlemen well known in Canada, and for some years connected with the bank, who recently passed away, namely, E. F. A. DuVernet, K.C., of Toronto, and the late Hon. S. Barker, P.C., M.P., of Hamilton.

The two new directors are Edward William Hume Blake, B.A., of Toronto, and R. O. McCulloch, of Galt, Ont. Mr. Blake is a son of the late Hon. Edward Blake, of Toronto. Mr. Blake was called to the Ontario bar in 1888, but is not now in practice. He is identified with important interests in Toronto, where he has spent his life, and is well known to leading business men in all parts of Canada.

Mr. McCulloch is a son of the late Hugh McCulloch, of Galt. He was admitted to the bar in 1888, and is in active practice as a barrister at Galt, Ont. He is secretary treasurer of the Goldie, McCulloch Company of Galt, and has been prominent in all local affairs in the city. He was formerly president of the Galt Board of Trade, and chairman of the Parks Commission. He is a member of the executive of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, with which he has been closely identified. In sport, Mr McCulloch has taken much interest, especially in cricket, and some years ago published, with J. E. Hall, a volume entitled "Sixty Years of Canadian Cricket."

The Union Bank has been for many years very intimately bound up with the financial life of Western Canada. It has assets now exceeding $80,000,000, and it has many branches in all the western provinces, with an equally strong connection in the east, where the head office was for many years located.

Italians Hold All Gains
Austrian Attacks Repulsed

Special Cable to The Examiner

ROME, via Paris, Aug. 13. The following statement is issued by the Italian army headquarters, under the date of Aug. 11

"In Cadore, while our artillery continues to operate against powerful defensive works in the upper valleys, the enemy tried by frequent but vain attacks to throw us back from some of our recently conquered positions. Thus on Aug. 9th our troops repulsed an attack in the Sexten Valley against Fonte Del Rumbanco and an advance of the enemy in force from Freikofel

"In Carnia are reported intense action by our artillery and small advances by our infantry. The enemy tried unsuccessfully to place movable wire entanglements before our trenches on Monte Medatta

"Near Plava yesterday at nightfall our troops successfully repulsed a double attack by the enemy, who was supported by strong artillery.

"On the Carso plateau, after having on the night of the 10th repulsed attacks in the zone of Sedusi, we delivered a counter-attack in the morning, obtaining sensible advantages in some parts of the front. Our infantry charged with such dash that two companies succeeded in capturing at the point of the bayonet strongly fortified heights situated well inside the enemy's lines. This position was not retained on account of the powerful concentrated artillery fire and vigorous counter-attacks of the enemy. The enemy's counter-attack, however, broke against the resistance of our forces posted in other conquered positions in the rear.

"In the Monfalcone section Austrian artillery renewed its bombardment but this time without result"

SURGICAL MAGNETS.

LONDON, Aug 12 In the hospitals of France magnets have been developed that will draw fragments of shrapnel to the surface from a depth in the flesh of even six inches, and steel-jacketed bullets have been drawn out from a depth of more than two inches.

At the Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., are many as wonderful electric machines, high frequency currents, X-ray, violet rays. Then Dr Pierce has equipped the Sanitarium with every known device to aid the sick and in the Surgical Department every instrument and appliance approved by the modern operator. The permanent cure of rupture is accomplished here without pain with local anaesthesia. Gravel is removed in many cases without pain and the patient can return home cured in a few days.

Dr R. V. Pierce, nearly half a century ago, devised and used two prescriptions which were almost untailing. They were made without alcohol or narcotics, extracted from roots and herbs by using pure glycerine and the ingredients are made public.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a tonic and blood purifier that cures pimples, blotches, sores, humors, eruptions and diseases of the skin.

Nothing stands as high to-day in the estimation of thousands of women as Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription this is a soothing nervine. For girls about to enter womanhood, and for the days of middle age Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription should always be on hand. In liquid or tablets. Write Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y. Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, cloth-bound, sent free to you on receipt of 5 dimes (or stamps) to pay expense of mailing only, duty prepaid.—Adv.

ENGLAND GETTING MANY MECHANICS FROM PHILADELPHIA

Examiner Special:

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 13.—England officially is recruiting labour in this city for British munition factories and shipyards. The success of agents in sending scores of workmen abroad is alarming Philadelphia manufacturers, who fear a labour famine.

Recruiting headquarters have been opened at 741 Spring Garden street by a representative of the Montreal office of the White Star-Dominion steamship line. The first batch of men assembled by this agency will be examined and those who qualify will be sent to New York, where they will sail for England.

Rooms at the hotel were engaged by a Mr. Wallace. Labour leaders said he has been active in New York and during three weeks has employed about [illegible] skilled mechanics there for the English plants.

Promises of high wages and a government bonus are made to the workmen. Labour organizers say that mechanics readily are attracted by offer of higher wages than they can earn in the United States. The high pay is afforded by overtime charges and the government bonus. Transportation of the men is furnished both ways. The positions are guaranteed for a year.

Secretary Wilson of the Metal Trades Councils estimated fully 300 Philadelphia workmen have gone to England within the last three months. This number does not include Englishmen and Scotchmen who returned upon receipt of a summons to work in the British munitions plants.

About fifty Philadelphians, steamship repairers and dockyards men, have been sent to South Africa. The wages they were promised were almost double the amount received here.

Recruiting of mechanics here during the last three months has been carried on by representatives of the English companies, according to the labour organizers. They said they had no knowledge that the British government had opened the Spring Garden street recruiting branch until union members who had received letters sought information.

JOINT PICNIC OF SOCIETIES GREAT SUCCESS

A very enjoyable picnic was held on Wednesday afternoon and evening at Jackson Park, when the members of the Independent Order of Foresters and Woodmen of the World assembled together with their friends. Games and sports of various kinds were engaged in during the afternoon, and swings were furnished for the amusement of the children. The tables set were soon loaded down with a sumptuous banquet and over a hundred sat down and partook of the refreshments. The children were also amply supplied with the good things and evidently relished the union flavour of the ice cream.

The banquet being concluded, Bro. J. W. Buyers was called on to act as chairman, and in a brief speech congratulated the ladies and gentlemen who had conducted the picnic so well. He considered this another step in the right direction of uniting fraternal societies. The chairman then called on Bro. G. W. Powell, the ever faithful financial secretary, who expressed his delight at being present. He also impressed on all the importance of not neglecting their duties to these societies. Bro. A. Graham, the enthusiastic organizer, then addressed the gathering urging all to protect their wives and families by taking some life insurance in either of these societies which were perfectly sound. Bro. A. Webber also delivered an eloquent address, strongly recommending the sick benefit department of the I.O.F. Bro. C. J. Hicks on behalf of the W.O.W., made a splendid address. Bro. W. G. McKee and Bro. E. J. Waterman superintended the distribution of the refreshments. The committee in charge of the refreshments were Mrs. A. Bradshaw, Mrs. G. Metcalfe, Miss Rhodehouse, Mrs. Carr, Mc Sproule and Mrs. Ivey.

Votes of thanks were tendered to the ladies and all who assisted.

The picnic concluded by singing God Save the King.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr H. W. Lear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

100 Little Wounds From Shrapnel on This Boys' Body

Extracts From Interesting Letter From Lieut. E. V. Frederick, M.D. Now in a Base Hospital in France

Following are extracts from a recent letter received by Mrs. Frederick from her husband, who is in France, a member of the R.A.M.C.

No. 1 Canadian Stationary Hospital, France

Sunday last we heard the roar of guns over the channel. It was rather foggy and we could not see far with our glasses, but by the papers we see that they sank a submarine. I saw the boat the next day which sank it. We see very interesting sights every half hour or so.

Fortunately we have only a few patients in the hospital and none of them serious, but we never know when a sudden change will take place, for any hour we may find from 300 to 500 new arrivals. We are living in tents four of us in one large tent with beds, and very comfortable. Within a short time we are to be made a series of emergency hospitals, where men coming from the front to the base and who are too serious to go any farther, will be taken in. We will not be any nearer the firing line than at present (40 miles), and fortunately we will not be near the coast, but in a nice city about the size of Peterborough. Our work in that case will be of the most interesting kind, and naturally of a most serious nature. On Monday night we could hear the guns at Ypres, nearly 40 miles distant, the wind being in the right direction. We have seen interesting surgical cases, different from anything that I have ever seen before. One case for instance, a boy about 19, with about 100 little spots all over his body from shrapnel, wounded about five days before reaching here. He had been treated by the Regimental Surgeon and Field Ambulance. Glad to say that after two operations he is doing well and will likely recover without losing his arm. Another chap very similar, developed gas gangrene, and had to have his arm amputated to save his life. I assisted Major Williams with an operation, and was the first of our crowd who has done any work in the operating room.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing In Civic Circles--Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Several complaints have been heard regarding the failure of the city to place in operation the drinking fountain in Central Park. There is practically only one drinking fountain in operation throughout the city, and that is located outside of the police station.

Tariff for Express Men.

The express men in conformation with the new by-law regulating the charge to be made for express work, as prepared by the Board of Police Commissioners, have prepared a printed tariff which has been put into operation.

Board of Works.

The Board of Works Committee will meet this evening, when the usual weekly budget will be disposed of. This committee, of which Ald. Green is chairman, practically represents a clearing house for complaints of all kinds.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

The small township of Cartwright, Durham County, will secure $4,000 for the patriotic fund.

A Judicial Concession.

Police Magistrate Jelfs of Hamilton said that he would not punish any farmer brought before him on the charge of working in connection with harvesting on Sunday.

Work as Harvesters.

At the alien registration bureau in Winnipeg over nine hundred permits were issued to men desirous of leaving the city to work in the harvest field.

Berlin Alderman Resigns.

Ald. G. G. Bucher has forwarded his resignation to Mayor Hett of Berlin and at the same time makes a demand for an investigation of the charge made at the last Council meeting by Ald. E. W. Trask that if Ald. Bucher "looked at the bottom of his heart and into his little note book he would see where the graft is going."

Municipal Street Railway.

Brantford municipal railway system, after six months' operation, earned sufficient to cover operating expenses and leave a balance of $4,283.90. This sum has been applied for payment on local improvement tax, for interest on pavements between car rails, $1,251; sinking fund, $2,214, bond and debenture interest, $3,257.75, and debenture interest, $5,-800 on purchase price. This makes a net deficit for the six months of $3,4 [illegible]. The commission is hopeful, however, of the system picking up within the year.

Mr. "Eddie" Graham is Given a Military Waltham Wrist Watch

One of the parlours of the Empress Hotel, last night, was the scene of honouring the departing brave. Mr. E. J. Graham—"Eddie" has enlisted in the 32nd battery of field artillery, now organizing, and, anticipating his early departure towards the front, a number of his friends "surrounded" him last night and put the bracelets on him that presented him with a handsome Waltham military wrist watch. On behalf of the donor Mr. Albert Hunter made the presentation, which was prefaced with a nice little tribute to "Eddie's" good qualities as a good sport and a good host, to his courage and loyalty in enlisting in the fighting ranks, leaving a family and a good position to fight for his country. A man that showed such qualities of courage, sense of duty and self-sacrifice would certainly make a good soldier. The occasion was an example of the spirit we all should show, in encouraging and honouring all those who don the khaki to fight for us, for Canada and for the Empire.

Situation in Various Balkan States Hourly Becoming More Menacing--Likely to Enter War

LONDON, Aug. 13.—There seems more likelihood than ever before that the Balkan States, now bristling with armed troops, will throw themselves into the war. From the various Balkan capitals comes word that the situation is hourly becoming more menacing, while from Germany and Turkey comes the news that the Austro-German alliance, fearful of Turkey's fate in the Dardanelles, is about to hurl an army of reinforcements across Serbia and Bulgaria to the relief of the Sultan.

Such action it taken may, and probably will, induce Roumania to rush to the aid of Serbia, aligning herself at last on the side of the Entente powers. A passage cut by the Germans through the north-east corner of Serbia would isolate Roumania from the west, a situation which Roumania's statesmen, leaning in favour toward the Entente powers as they do, are naturally not in favour of.

Roumania to Be Drawn In.

From Rome it is learned on supposedly good authority that the Roumanian Ministry has, in fact, already determined to go to Serbia's aid if Germany attempts to force a passage through that country to Bulgaria and Turkey. In the absence of thoroughly definite news respecting the situation, however, it is impossible to tell what may be expected of Roumania, although it is conceded in even the most pessimistic quarters that she is more likely to join with the Entente powers than with the Triple Alliance, now represented by Germany, Austria and Turkey.

In Germany the voice of the most insistent patriots has been raised in favour of instant action against Serbia and the opening of a road to the succor of Turkey. This propaganda is being led by Count Reventlow in the Tages Zeitung, who says that the time for quibbling has ceased and nothing will suffice now but the invasion of Serbia.

Meanwhile Serbia and the Entente powers are doing everything in their power to renew the Balkan League, securing its sympathies to the Entente powers, and thus erecting a strong barrier between Germany and Austria from Turkey.

In Constantinople notice has been given out from the mosques that Germany is about to send an army to the Dardanelles. Hope there is running to an ecstatic height. It is even hinted by the newspapers that the campaign against Egypt may be expected to take shape soon.

It is known that Germany and Austria have massed a considerable force at Orsowa, in Hungary, the natural point from which to direct an invasion of Serbia. The presence of troops here is reported to have drawn strong Roumanian forces to the frontier, while the Serbs, on their side of the line, are making preparations for a fierce resistance to any attempt at invasion.

What of Bulgaria.

While Bulgaria has heretofore shown a strong predilection in favour of Germany and Turkey, the Entente diplomats are now more confident that their offers of integrity to that country have met with approval. Bulgaria, of course, is one of the most, if not the most, important factor in the equation because of her geographical position, standing as she does a natural barrier or help to any endeavour by the Germans to send reinforcements to Turkey.

Movement of German Troops Through Belgium Has Been Continuous For Days

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13 — The Daily Mail's correspondent at The Hague telegraphs that a prominent neutral citizen, who has just arrived from Brussels, says that the movement of German troops through Belgium to the western front has been constant for several days.

A significant order of the day predicting resumption by the Germans of a vigorous offensive in the west has been issued to the Teutonic armies in Flanders, according to the Amsterdam Telegraaf. An extract from this order, telegraphed by the Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company, follows:

"Our work now is practically finished in the east and we are about to begin in the west. Peace is certain in October.

The French official communication chronicles the recapture through counter-attacks of part of the trenches lost in the Argonne, and the repulse of enemy attacks at other points. There was also some rather severe fighting in the Vosges, in which hand grenades were used.

Sure, Because He Knows.

Albert Thomas, Under-Secretary of War in charge of munitions, tells the Petit Parisien that France's efforts to produce munitions are different in method, but equal in results, to those of England, which he recently viewed. The newspaper quotes him as follows:

"We have an army which at the present moment is armed so as to withstand any shock, an army which on the other hand is capable of making a strong offensive. Its morale is good; that is to say, the army is prepared to remain as it is if necessary.

"Every day our strength grows both in England and in France. Notwithstanding the formidable resources at the disposal of Germany, it is not possible that the resources of the allies will not assure them when the time is ripe for complete victory. What we have, what England has and will have all the resources that she can create will assure us supremacy. I am convinced of this because I know. Every day I repeat to my friends my conviction that we shall be victorious."

A Dunkirk despatch says "All along the French front preparations are going steadily forward for a winter campaign. In the trenches the greatest possible degree of care is being taken to protect the men, not only against attacks, but also against the rigors of weather. Tar is being used wherever the intrusion of water is likely to occur, the effort being to make the trenches as thoroughly watertight as possible. Drainage of various kinds is being provided, and concrete is being freely used to provide weatherproof shelters. If it is necessary to make use of the same trenches this winter as the troops occupied last winter, they will not suffer so largely from wet and frozen feet, and it will be possible to sleep or rest with some degree of comfort instead of in the mud.

POLISH CITY HAS FALLEN

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—The War Office has announced that the Polish city of Seidlce, fifty-five miles south-east of War-aw, has been captured by the Germans.

"General Botha feels," he declared, "that when a man has freedom he has everything a man can contend for. His fellow-countrymen are free, and therefore he asks them to fight with him for the benefit of the institutions under the British flag. These are the motives," added Sir Wilfrid, "that are impelling me to take the part that I am taking in this war."

In conclusion, Sir Wilfrid declared: "This is the message that I bring you. The peril is at present great. We must not remain under a false impression of security. If we want to win we must be worthy of freedom, and to be worthy of freedom we have got to fight for it." (Loud cheers.)

Arras a Heap of Debris: 120 Left of 26,000

Special to The Examiner:

(By Emile Vandervelde, Belgian Minister of State.)

PARIS, Aug. 11.—I have just visited what remains of Arras and Soissons; along the Aisne scarpe. Or Arras, like also some of the first line trenches Nieuport and Ypres, our poor villages along the Yser, nothing remains but a heap of debris.

The City Hall, that gem of medieval achitecture, has undergone the most grievous mutilation. In many streets not a single house is intact.

Arras had before the war 26,000 inhabitants. There now are 120. In a small shop near the City Hall I found a little old man cheerfully selling funeral crowns and postcards depicting the ruins. The bombardment continues daily. Most people are living in cellars.

At Soissons I was entertained by a general at tea and at breaktast in the cellar. Bombs continuously passed over Soissons in the direction of Arras. The allied troops constantly are busy extending and strengthening the trenches and barbed wire defenses. At certain places the hostile lines are within sixty feet of each other.

When not exchanging shots and grenades the soldiers enjoy the intervals of comparative calm during which newspapers weighted with stones are thrown from one trench to another.

One day a dog crossed to the French lines bearing the message: "Please tell Corporal Blank that his wife and children at Lens are well and send him love."

Quarries on the Aisne has been transformed by the use of cement into veritable fortresses. I saw a six-inch shell fall on the cement roof in a quarry without the slightest damage. Everywhere among the allied troops I found absolute confidence of final victory.

Looking for a Room.

"I hope you find your bedroom comfortable?" said the boarding-house proprietor.

"The room is most comfortable," said the tactful guest; "but the walls are so thin that I dont think the gentleman in the next room can have quite the privacy he would wish for his snoring."

Gets Ten Years in Prison

Special to The Examiner:

WINDSOR, Aug. 13. — Ten years' imprisonment was today imposed on William Lefler of Detroit, convicted of causing an explosion in Peabody's Overall factory, and attempting to blow up the Windsor Armouries. The Peabody factory was making military clothing at the time.

American Hero Killed in Battle

SYDNEY, Aug. 13.—The names of several men who gave their home as the United States upon volunteering with Australian contingents for active service in this war lately have appeared in the published lists of casualties cabled from Turkey to the Commonwealth.

Some have been killed and some wounded. Notable among those killed was Sergeant Major A. L. Sherbourne, who enlisted in a New South Wales command. Sherbourne was a native of Indiana. He was a trolley car conductor in Newcastle, this State, when he enlisted. He was wounded seriously in the first landing of Austrihan troops upon the Gallipoli Peninsula, but in a recent letter to a friend in Newcastle he announced his intention of returning soon to the front. He did so and met his death.

Sergeant Major Sherbourne served in the United States navy in the war with Spain and subsequently served in the British army in the Boer war. He was present at the capture of Santiago in the former war, and in the latter he earned a medal. After the Boer war he joined the Cape mounted police in South Africa and received special commendation for courageous conduct. Later he entered the railway service in South Africa.

He was a man of fine physique and an expert boxer and athlete. He also had considerable literary attainments and was the author of several short stories. In a letter written by him to a Sydney newspaper not long before the Australian expeditionary force was shifted to Turkey to fight he vigorously defended the conduct of the Australian soldiery in Egypt, it having been reported in some quarters that the troops from the antipodes were falling into evil ways. He left Australia a corporal and was evidently promoted while in Egypt.

Barriefield Camp News

BARRIEFIELD WAR CAMP, Aug. 12.—With the 59th Battalion out on a route march yesterday and the 8th C.M.R. on its trek to Belleville today, things are pretty quiet in camp. Recruits are coming into camp from all parts every day and recruiting agents are busy in city, town and country. The camp commandmant will take all the recruits he can possibly get, and when one unit is filled, he will start another, and the recruiting ball will be kept rolling until the war is over, and Britain no longer needs soldiers from the Dominion of Canada. Several coloured men have applied for enlistment, and no colour line is being drawn by the recruiting officer.

Since it was announced that the permission of a wife was not necessary to a married man who wanted to enlist, and that a young man eighteen years of age could be accepted without the consent of his parent, there has been quite an increase in the number of recruits. Men who from the very opening of the war wanted to enlist, and were prevented by the refusal of their wives to sign the necessary papers, are now getting under the colours and seeking enlistment. It is expected that the change will make a big difference in recruiting in Kingston and vicinity, and many officers of the militia who were kept home entirely through the refusal of wives to give their consent for the husband to volunteer will now take advantage of the change and offer themselves to Col. Hemming for service. No man now has an excuse for not going to the front, and the camp at Barriefield is delighted with the action of the militia department.

Yesterday morning at nine o'clock the 59th battalion left the camp for a route march down the Gananoque road. Two transport waggons and three field kitchens were taken with the battalion, and the excellent bugle band of the battalion furnished inspiration for the march. The battalion returned to camp a little before 6 o'clock in the evening after covering in the march a distance of 19 miles. The men were halted at 11.30 in the morning at a spot selected for dinner. They were permitted to rest until 2.30 in the afternoon, when the battalion started back for camp. The men stood the march well and enjoy the change from the daily monotony of camp drill. There is a touch of active service about route marching which appeals to soldiers in their training.

Major Sears, recruiting officer for the new 33rd battery of Kingston, has opened recruiting offices in the old Hub building on the Market Square. Major Barrett is using the office in artillery park. Already 26 recruits have been secured for the battery, and by Monday these men will be ready for a place under canvas in the camp. At present the recruits are boarded in the city. Single and married men between the ages of 18 and 45 will be accepted.

A regimental alarm was sounded by the 8th C. M. R. yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock as a test, and although the regiment had no warning whatever, they turned out with rifles and bandoliers in four minutes, and all mounted orderlies and orderly officers in five minutes with horses saddled and prepared for any emergency. This was an excellent test of the alertness of the 8th and Lt. Col. Munro and his officers were well pleased with the smart response of the men.

Shaughnessy Suggests No League Next Year If the War Continues

Had Offer to Lead Toronto International Team This Year, But Has Too Good a Berth in Ottawa

Losing two games in one day was a very hard dose for Shaughnessy to swallow and the worry over this terrible disaster made the Ottawa cook at loggart. After the double defeat at Brantford on Monday, he was so downhearted that he went so far as to announce his retirement from the Canadian league at the close of the season, but the people in the know reanize that the peerless leader, as they term him in Ottawa, has too good a thing to get it slip through his hands for a year or two at least. Shaughnessy is part owner of the Ottawa club and draws his share of the profits as well as collecting a fat pay envelope each month with the rest of the players. Then in the fall he gets a neat sum for coaching the McGill football team and after the hockey season closes he takes charge of the Ottawa hockey team, so it will be seen that the big fellow is busy all the year around and incidentally make a scary that many major league players would consider themselves lucky to receive.

Proposes No League in 1916.

Shaughnessy was offered the management of the Toronto International league club this year and was also offered a position as business manager of one of the Toronto professional hockey teams, but he turned the offer down, preferring to remain in Ottawa, where everything was breaking well for him. It is hardly likely that he will leave the capital now, even if he has been made a good offer. He thinks, though that if the war is not over by next year, the Canadian league should suspend business until it is, and his opinion is backed up by other men financially interested in the league. If such action looks at all probable there is every reason to believe that he will seek another berth for the time being, but the Ottawa franchise is too valuable a one for him to throw it over his shoulder for all time. He has been a valuable man to the league, even if he has crabbed off all the pennants since he entered it, but it is a well known fact that he has also done the organization harm by exceeding the salary limit each year. The Ottawa salary list at present is away above the league limit, for he cannot have three major league players on his roster without paying them considerably more than the average player gets.

Over Salary Limit.

While things look rosy for Shaughnessy to the man on the outside looking in, he has had troubles of his own during his term as pilot of the Ottawa team that has caused him a heap of worry. Shag claims that the Ottawa team receipts last season were over $70,000, but that the club lost money. That is rather discouraging but Shag has himself to blame partly, for he lost $240 the last month in the purchase of Jack Mitchell, the artstop. He paid $1,000 for him and then he was drafted for some clearly after. But it was one of his pennant winning price moves and of course he had to pay dearly for it. If Shaughnessy is not with Ottawa next year he will be with Toronto and should easily make good in International company.

Hams Making Money.

While Shaughnessy thinks that the league should suspend business next year if the war is not over by that time, there are managers who think otherwise. Unlike other games people cannot say that the young men figuring in the game should be at the front, for the players are nearly all Americans and for that reason could not be expected to go to the war unless Uncle Samuel gets into the mixup within the next eight months. Despite the war, the league has had a fairly good season financially, the local club having been able to pay off some of the debts incurred last season and to show a neat balance on the right side. The attendance here has been gratifying and there has been no great kick from any source but Toronto, and there has been too much trouble on the inside there for the good of the club. There is no reason why the league should not be doing business as usual next year. Hamilton is specially

Hamilton and Ottawa Athletes Are Enlisting

Jess Ketchum, another one of Ottawa's prominent athletes, has enlisted. Ketchum joined the 77th regiment, and is now in training with them. Ketchum is a football and hockey player of note, as well as a swimmer. He played with the Ottawa Seconds last year when they won the Quebec Rugby Football Union title, and has played with the Aberdeen Hockey team for the last two years. He was a member of the Britannia Boating Club, where he always took part in swimming events of any description. Jess many friends will wish him every success in his new occupation.—Ottawa Journal.

The City Baseball League will be well represented in the Sportsmen's battery at the player's carry out their present intentions. Sam Langton set the pace by offering his services and many other players followed suit after the league meeting on next month. Captain F. A. Wright has announced he will be at the 6th Field Battery headquarters at 7.30 sharp each night between now and the 27th, so that any men who cannot practice with him during the day can do so at night. The Sportsmen's battery is going to be a most popular affair as it covers organized in the city, and as for 140 men are needed for the athletes and their friends who want to join had better do so at once. Captain Wright can be consulted during the day at his office in the Landed Banking and Loan Building, Hamilton Spectator.

SHAUGHNESSY WILL LEAVE

HAMILTON, Aug. 11. It is learned from an authoritative source that Frank Shaughnessy, the successful Ottawa pilot, is putting in his last year in the Canadian League. This is not surprising, for it is known that "Shag" had two offers to manage teams this season in Class AA organizations, but turned them down.

The passing of "Shag" from the ci[illegible] practically means that the league will no longer claim Ottawa as a stronghold. It is even doubtful if the capital city will be represented. Shaughnessy has given Ottawa a winning team every year he has been in charge, and had it not been for his untiring efforts the game would never have prospered there.

"Chick" Gandil Won the Ivory Cross

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. Chick Gandil, first sacker of the Washington club, won for himself, in the first game with the Tigers, one of those ivory crosses that are being distributed so profusely to players this season. He turned one of the classic "boners" of the year, its result being a tied score. And that was tantamount to defeat for the home team, as the game turned out.

Cobb had opened the sixth with a triple. Detroit needed three runs to tie Crawford hit to Gandil. Who was playing deep. Cobb had hoped the lines on them by dumbfounding Comer Gandil, instead of making the easy play at first, threw to Henry. Who was in Cobb put on speed and slid in with two runs, three games to play.

That eventually lost the ball game, as the side would have been retired with one run. But Gandil played Crawford at first. Veach and Burns etc. Young walked, Stanage fanned. That should have been the end of Dauss but to McBride and the latter let the ball go through him so left field. Two runs scored. That evened the count.

McBride ostensibly was blamed for the loss of the game because of his mechanical slip. But Gandil was the guilty party. He couldn't get Cobb anyway, and with but one clean hit off Boehling up to that time there was no sense in playing on Ty with the lead the Nationals had. Cobb just kidded Gandil into beating his own club.

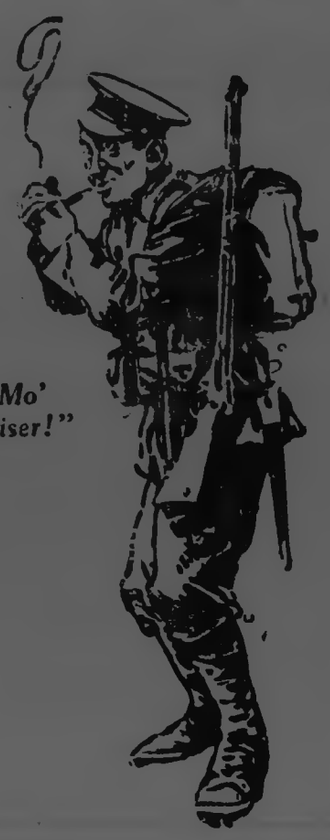
SOLDIERS ARE GRATEFUL FOR TOBACCO PRESENTS



"'Arf a Mo' Kaiser!"

Peterborough Soldier Acknowledges Receipt of Tobacco

How one small package of cigarettes paves the way for an introduction between a "Johnny Canuck" at the front and a Toronto family, is revealed in a soldier-like letter which has been received by Mrs. Vicars, 50 College street, from Bdr. W. E. Graham, of the 10th Battery, C.F.A., First Expeditionary Force, from "Somewhere in Belgium."

So grateful was Bombardier Graham for the unexpected receipt of the smokes that he sat right down and wrote the letter. He tells how acceptable the tobacco was to every member of the Battery, and his letter is typical of the many which are being received in Canada from the boys of various units who have received the tobacco presents.

JUST READ THIS LETTER.

This letter, which was written on July 26, reads as follows:

"You will, no doubt, be surprised to hear from me, but this afternoon, when the mail was being distributed, we were each given a box of cigarettes. On looking on the back of my package I noticed your name and address, so I thought I had better drop you a few lines to thank you for them. You have no idea how we appreciate a box of cigarettes out here, for it is impossible to get anywhere. I belong to the 10th Battery, C.F.A. This battery belongs to St. Catharines, but I happen to come from Peterborough.

"Everything has been going along fine so far for us. The Germans have tried, but in vain, to break through the Canadians. The regular soldiers call the Canadians the 'God-Fearing Fools'—a pretty good name. They say the Canadians are neither afraid of man or beast. We certainly have made a name for ourselves, and hope to keep the good work up. I have been all through the battles and have been quite lucky. I only hope that my luck stays with me to the end. Our battery at one time was only 125 yards from the Germans, and I do not know, to this day, how we ever escaped, but we did, and also saved our guns as well. It certainly was one of the narrowest escapes I have ever had, and I trust I shall never get that close to them again.

"I hope to hear from you some time, because it is pretty lonely out here. Thanks ever so much, again, for the package of cigarettes."

THOUGHTFULNESS REPAID.

Mr. and Mrs. Vicars were highly pleased to receive such a nice letter and their thoughtfulness in sending packages to the soldier-boys, is more than amply repaid by the knowledge that at least one of the country's fighters has been afforded a passing pleasure. Why don't you qualify to receive a few words of thanks from a grateful soldier?

Ten cents sends a package of twenty cigarettes. Twenty-five cents sends a package of fifty cigarettes, one-fifth of a pound of tobacco, cigarette papers and matches. One dollar sends fifty cigarettes, one-fifth of a pound of tobacco, cigarette papers, matches, a safety razor outfit, four khaki handkerchiefs and some chocolate.

ALL THE MONEY RECEIVED GOES INTO THE GIFT, and your name goes with each package.

Won't you help?

MUTT AND JEFF IN NEW YORK COURT

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—A final decision, it is expected, will be handed down tomorrow by the Supreme Court of the State, regarding the ownership of the name Mutt and Jeff, heretofore employed in connection with the newspaper illustrations of Harry C. Fisher. Title to them is claimed by The Star Company, which means Wm. R. Hearst, and by the Wheeler Syndicate and Fisher.

The Star Company, which publishes The New York American, contends that since Mr. Fisher, the artist, has left the service of the Hearst newspapers he can no longer call his merry men Mutt and Jeff, and that it insists upon drawing for other employers he must relinquish title to the names.

The case went before the Supreme Court on the form of injunctions applied for by both parties to restrain the other from using the names in their publications.

Star Company's Claim.

When the Star Company brought suit, Mr. Fisher's contract with the company having expired on August 8th, after being operative for four years, the counsel for the company, Barrister Colby stated to the Weeks that Mr. Fisher had been receiving $500 a week from Mr. Hearst for using the newspaper rights in the Mutt and Jeff feature, the idea and the name rights having been reserved by the artist. Mr. Colby contended that since Mr. Fisher resigned he could not use the name in connection with the Star Company's rights, by every reason of equity and precedent Colby should be given [illegible] ent possession of the title "Mutt and Jeff." This would imply, of course, that the Hearst papers could employ other artists to draw Mutt and Jeff pictures.

Mr. Colby in his argument contended that the Star Company had made the Mutt and Jeff [illegible] popular by placing [illegible] prestige of a [illegible] ture. He said Mr. Fisher had been coddled, pampered and spoiled. The Star Company, he said, has created the Mutt and Jeff comic strips and he asked that the Star Company's rights be protected and that Fisher be enjoined.

Fisher's Revenue.

Not the least interesting fact brought out in the litigation over Bud Fisher's handmakers is the amount of money that Mutt and Jeff brought in to the Star Company, and which, under contracts already made by the Wheeler Syndicate, they will bring in. Bud Fisher, himself, by his new arrangement with the syndicate, will earn far more money than the President of the United States receives in one year. Under a contract with Mr. [illegible] Bud is to receive $1,000 a week [illegible] the gross receipts of the [illegible] Nearly a hundred newspapers in various parts of the country have contracted to use the Mutt and Jeff drawings, and Fishers' income therefore will be in the neighborhood of $2,000 a week, perhaps [illegible] more since additional contracts are anticipated. Therefore Bud Fisher's salary will be about a year, and Miss Pickford is reputed to be the highest paid star in the film world.

GERMANY'S RULE IN ANTWERP HARSHER

Rotterdam, Aug. 12.—German rule in Antwerp is becoming increasingly harsh. From today more severe regulations are to be enforced. Apparently the Germans have reason to suspect that demonstrations against the invaders are contemplated by the Belgians.

The following orders have been issued by the German governor:

All shops, bars, cafes and cinemas must close at eight o'clock unless special permits to the contrary are obtained.

Shops which by way of demonstration close before the fixed time will remain closed until further notice.

"After nine o'clock in the evening no one is to be in the streets or public places without a special permit in writing.

"All tramway traffic must cease at nine o'clock."

Even the bank clearings are looking up.

And iron common does not look winded yet.

A low priced stock isn't always cheap.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad placed an order for 17,000 tons of rails and 1,000 steel hopper car bodies. The money involved is about $1,000,000.

Joseph B. McCall, president of the Philadelphia Electric Company, says there is absolutely no truth in the report of negotiations for the combination of the Philadelphia and the United Gas Improvement companies.

The New York Stock Exchange admitted to the list $706,000 additional first preferred stock of the Booth Fisheries Company.

William R. Fagin, who for some time has been about the only specialist remaining in "Brookly" on the New York Stock Exchange, suddenly attracted by entering the arbitrage crowd and buying 5,000 shares of Allis-Chalmers.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has asked bids on the construction of sixteen new vessels for use in the New York Harbor. These will consist of one steam lighter, three derrick barges and twelve covered hatch barges.

NEW YORK PRESS COMMENTS.

Times: It seems clear that the market has been giving itself over to very free upbuilding of stocks, and the general interest is not harmed but rather helped by setbacks which help to put a check on unrestrained bullish ardor of stocks.

Sun: The present reactionary movement may go further, but substantial support is evident on the strength of the present price structure.

World: The reaction is welcomed by the conservative element, which believes it should go further.

ACTUAL CLOSE NOT OBTAINABLE.

The closing quotations given below shows the market as it stood at about one-thirty o'clock. Owing to a break in the wire caused by the sinking of a boat in the Niagara River, which carried away the telegraph cables, the final close was not obtainable.

Presentation Made To Horace Blake

A very pleasant evening was spent on Monday, August 9th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Foster, 194 Reid street when about twenty scouts and their friends gathered there to bid farewell to Assistant Scout master Horace Blake, who left for Barriefield on Tuesday morning with the 8th C M R Games of all kinds were played until supper, after which Horace was presented with an address and a pipe and tobacco. The address was as follows:

Peterborough, Aug. 9th.

Mr. Horace Blake, City.

Dear Horace: We learn with deep regret of your departure from Peterborough, with the overseas forces and since you have been connected with the Peterborough boy scouts, we felt that we could not let you depart from our midst without voicing our appreciation and esteem for your services. We are proud of the honour that has been bestowed upon us by you, the third member of our troop with the forces. We would therefore ask you to accept this small token of appreciation and esteem for your services when you use it you will think not unkindly of the Peterborough boy scouts, who now wish you God speed, bon voyage and a safe return.

Signed on behalf of the scouts,

Victor Sedgwick,
Richard Foster.

Horace was taken completely by surprise, but thanked the boys for their gift and he hoped that the troop would be better when he came back.

The presentation was made by Richard Foster and the address was read by Victor Sedgwick.

The scouts are very grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Foster, who gave them the use of their house, and the scouts desire to thank them and their family for their kindness to them.

All members of the scouts are asked to meet to-night at the armouries at 7.30 p.m. in full uniform. This is an important meeting, so please attend. By order Victor Sedgwick, A. S. Scoutmaster.

MOST WOUNDED RECOVER.

German Figures Show That 88.5 Per Cent. Return to Service.

On the basis of an investigation conducted in the war hospitals in Germany, the percentage of recoveries, returns to service, and deaths among German wounded soldiers has been compiled. The following figures are taken from the Berliner Tageblatt of July 10, just received here.

	Returned to Service.	Deaths.	Recovered, but Unfit.
August	84.8	3.0	12.2
September	88.1	2.7	9.1
October	88.9	2.4	8.7
November	87.3	2.1	10.6
December	87.8	1.7	10.5
January	88.7	1.4	9.9
February	88.6	1.4	10.0
March	88.9	1.6	9.5
April	91.2	1.4	7.4
Average	88.5	1.9	9.6

Inasmuch as even some of those being classed roughly as "recovered but unfit," the German paper says returned subsequently to military service the percentage of those who recovered and resumed military service is somewhat in excess of the figures given.

BELGIUM'S MORAL VICTORY

THE HAGUE, Aug. 12. Reviewing the first year of the war, the News Amsterdammer, which is deemed the most influential weekly in Holland, declares that the only nation which thus far can be credited with a truly great victory is Belgium. The paper says:

It is unquestionable that Belgium, which has suffered the greatest material losses, has also suffered the greatest triumph. Placed before the choice between honor and possible ruin, and without a moment's hesitation, its young army, in spite of the initial inefficiency of its officers, has fought with such dauntless courage that it has really influenced the whole course of the war. In spite of brutal intimidation by an unscrupulous enemy, the mass of its people have not once wavered. Whether or not Germany will be able to annex the nation, as many Germans demand, cannot be foreseen, but whatever happens the moral triumph of the whole episode will remain with Belgium.

SAY DRINK SHORTENS LIFE

The Department of Health made public recently results obtained from a study of the effect of alcohol on human life made by the insurance companies. The subject is also discussed by Arthur Hunter, Actuary for the New York Life. Mr. Hunter explains that the investigations were made primarily to assist in determining the types that could safely be accepted for insurance at regular rates, which types should pay extra premium, and which should be declined. Forty-three leading companies supplied their records on about 2,000,000 lives, covering about twenty-five years. These were divided in five classes, the fifth class being "those whose habits with regard to alcoholic beverages were not satisfactory in the past, or who used liquor steadily at the time of application for insurance."

"Nothing has been more conclusively proved than that a steady free use of alcoholic beverages, or occasional excess is detrimental to the individual," says Mr. Hunter. "Among men who admitted that they had taken alcohol occasionally to excess in the past, but whose habits were considered satisfactory when they were insured, the extra mortality was equivalent to a reduction of more than four years in the average life of these men."

The Health Department comments that while the committee did not report on the mortality among total abstainers, statistics have been gathered to justify the statement that total abstainers have a mortality during the working years of life of about one half of that among those who take two glasses of whiskey a day.—New York Times.

TURKISH AMMUNITION NEARING EXHAUSTION

As a Result of Repeated Attacks by Allied Forces at the Dardanelles---German and Turkish Diplomats Renew Efforts to Obtain Consent of Balkan States for Passage of Munitions to Turkey.

Special Morning Cable.

ATHENS, Aug. 14.—In spite of optimistic statements from Constantinople, Turkish ammunition supplies are nearing exhaustion as a result of repeated attacks by Allied forces at the Dardanelles.

Private advices received here to-day said that German and Turkish diplomats have renewed their efforts to obtain the consent of the Balkan States for passage of munitions to Turkey.

Boat loads of wounded from the latest fighting on Gallipoli Peninsula continue to arrive at Constantinople.

It is estimated that 120,000 Turkish wounded are now in Constantinople hospitals.

GERMAN CRUISER SUNK.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 14.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Times reported to-day that a German cruiser was sunk and several other German warships damaged in an engagement with the Russian fleet near Oesel Thursday. The Germans, the correspondent reported, are attempting to bottle up the Russian fleet in order that they may transport troops to the Gulf of Riga region without molestation.

MANY KILLED AND INJURED.

NORTHAMPTON, Eng., Aug. 14.—The Irish mail train was derailed near the Stowe tunnel to-day. It is reported several persons were killed and many injured.

ATHENS, Aug. 14.—Desperate fighting has been resumed on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

VIENNA, Aug. 14.—It is believed here that the Austro-Germans will not attempt to reach Petrograd.

The Situation In The Balkans

Bulgaria Still Smarting Over Loss of Macedonia—Can't Join Allies

ROME, Aug 14—The Mir, a newspaper of Sofia, Bulgaria, in its issue of July 13, published the following editorial article on the status of the negotiations between Bulgaria and Great Britain, France and Russia.

There is to-day no indication that an understanding can be reached between Bulgaria and the Entente powers. The reasons for this are numerous. Had these negotiations been begun earlier in the war they would have progressed more rapidly. It is also true that if there existed greater confidence between the two parties an understanding would not have been delayed. Nevertheless the principal reason for delay is to be found elsewhere.

The triple entente calls for the help of neutral nations in the name of justice and of liberty, as well as in the name of the unity of the people concerned in a durable peace. With this end in view the entente powers are labouring hard to appease the reciprocal hatreds among the Balkan States and to substitute amicable relations toward the hostile feelings at present existing between the Bulgarians, the Serbians, the Greeks and the Roumanians. The entente powers, in the pour parlers with these States, persist in this idea.

"This being so, the mission of the entente powers is complicated, not to say impossible. The difficulty arises from the intransigeant attitude of the Balkan States toward each other."

"Bulgaria cannot embark in another war without the guarantee that the treaty of Bucharest shall be torn up. But there is every indication that neither Serbia, Greece nor Roumania is inclined to grant the concessions necessary to correct the injustice done to Bulgaria at Bucharest in 1913."

By the treaty of Bucharest at the close of the second Balkan war that portion of Macedonia which had been obtained by Bulgaria at the close of the first Balkan war was taken from her and divided between Greece and Serbia. Bulgaria also lost to Roumania a strip of land from the Black Sea to the Danube. Bulgaria also was compelled to cede back to Turkey not only Adrianople but the battlefields of Kirk Kilisseh.

British and German Trenches on Hill No. 60 Only Six Yards Apart

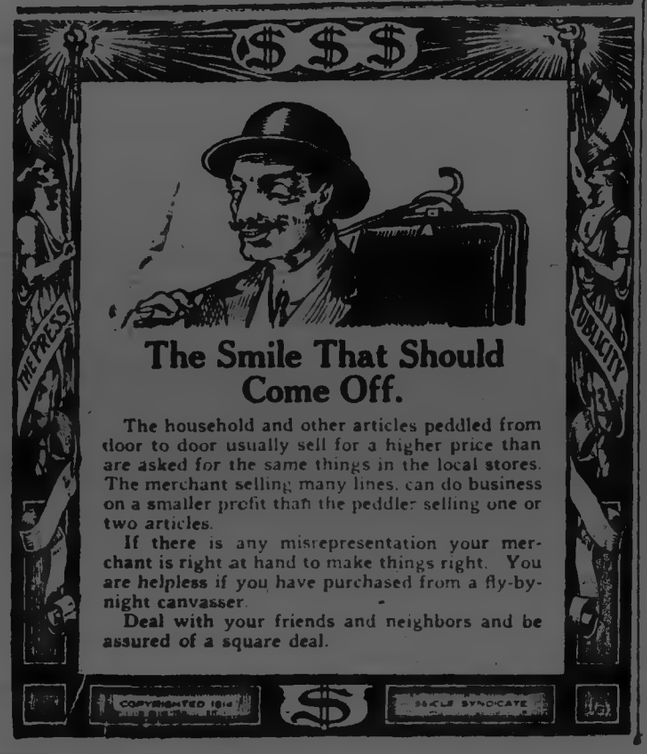
DUNKIRK, Aug. 14.—The present position at Hill No. 60, which the British military authorities recently admitted had lapsed back into German possession, is peculiar and of great interest.

The hill is really nothing but a knoll of gently rising ground that forms the end of the Klein-Zillebeke ridge. The German trenches run in a double tier along the crest and upper slope, while the British trenches form an irregular line along the edge of the lower slope. The Germans are at the top of the hill, while the British are a little way up the side of it.

The whole face of the hill presents a picture of the wildest confusion. Everywhere are huge craters, the result of mine explosions on the night of the British attack. Torn and gaping sandbags are scattered in profusion, broken rifles, odds and ends of equipment of all kinds, smashed barbwire and a mass of other debris lies in bewildering variety down the hillside, the whole half hidden in the long grass that has sprung up between the trenches.

The trenches twist and wind in a remarkable manner. At one point there is an old communication trench running from the British lines straight into the heart of the German position, and down this two barricades have been erected, one on the British side and one on the German side. Here the opposing forces come within six yards of each other. Between the rival barricades there stretches a short patch of ground shut in on either hand by the crumbling walls of the old trench.

At one spot a railway bridge spans the British position, and in the cutting beneath it a large pool of stagnant water has collected. Beyond it stretches the railway line, the rails torn and twisted, and partly covered with the weeds growing between the ties. The line is under direct fire from the German lines, and to cross it in the open would mean certain death from snipers in the opposite trench, forty yards away. In the pool below the bridge a score or more of bodies have been lying for some weeks, and no man tares approach to bring them out for burial.



The Smile That Should Come Off.

The household and other articles peddled from door to door usually sell for a higher price than are asked for the same things in the local stores. The merchant selling many lines, can do business on a smaller profit than the peddler selling one or two articles.

If there is any misrepresentation your merchant is right at hand to make things right. You are helpless if you have purchased from a fly-by-night canvasser.

Deal with your friends and neighbors and be assured of a square deal.

(Mistress outerily) "How dare you talk to me in that way! I never heard such impudence. You have a lot of nerve to call yourself a lady's maid!" New Maid, "I don't call myself that now, ma'am, but I was a lady's maid before I got this job."

LINER CARRIED NO HORSES

Leyland Liners Sail Without Usual Cargo for Britain.

BOSTON, Aug. 14—The Leyland Line, which has been carrying thousands of horses for the allies to Liverpool and Avonmouth since the early days of the war, admitted that the British army officers, who are superintending the transportation of horses in this country had unexpectedly notified officials of the line that there would be no horses for boats sailing at this time. The Cambria sailed Thursday for Avonmouth and London and the Devonian sailed yesterday for Liverpool without horses. These are the first Leyland Liners equipped for horse transport that have sailed from Boston without horses since last September.

FOUR BILLION SMOKES FOR BRITISH ARMY

American Tobacco Company Making Them Three Thousand a Minute.

St. Louis, Aug. 12.—William B. Wilson, an official of the American Tobacco Company, today announced that the corporation is filling a rush order for [illegible] cigarettes for the Allies. The company is turning them out at the rate of 3,000 a minute.

The Allies found they needed tobacco for the men in the trenches, said Mr. Wilson. When they contracted for the cigarettes they said the men simply had to smoke to steady their nerves. It was decided cigarettes were better adapted for the soldiers than any other form of tobacco.

Has been Canada's favorite yeast for more than forty years.

GRAIN IS SHELLING AND SPROUTING

Last Deluge Undid Work of Bright Days—Wheat Most Affected—Root Crops Also Damaged.

Few farmers recollect a more trying season than the present one. A few days ago the promise of a splendid harvest was shattered by the worst rain storm in many years and since then the uncertainty of the weather conditions has kept them continually on tenterhooks. Fields of grain that had been cut and stooked have been drenched, partially dried and drenched again until the grain has started to shell and continuous good weather from now on will only save part of the yield. Market gardeners have also suffered severe loss. The full extent of the damage will not be known until they harvest their root crops. Fields in many districts near Peterborough have been in a swampy condition since the rain storm last week and potatoes and other root crops have already started to rot.

The straw used by many to mix with silo feed in the winter will not be had this fall. It is so coloured and musty that its value for feed has been destroyed. Many farmers in their haste to cut their grain two days ago, completely exhausted their horses in dragging the heavy binders over the soft earth.

RUSSIANS WIN VICTORY OVER TURKS ON EUPHRATES

From 15,000 to 20,000 Turkish Casualties in Three Week's Campaign---Russian Front in the Causasus Now Believed Free From Attack.

Special Morning Cable.

PETROGRAD, via London, Aug. 13.—An explanation of the renewal of a wholesale exodus of Armenians from their country into Transcaucasia is found in an account of military operations on the Caucasus front since July 22 from the headquarters of the Russian army in the Caucasus, dated August 9, made public recently.

After the Russians penetrated to Mush, eighty-three miles south of Erzerum, and to Plian, Halil Bey, the commander of the Turkish forces in the Caucasus, reorganized his army, bringing its strength up to ninety-thousand, made up of six divisions of infantry, one of cavalry and a large body of Kurds. General Eudenitch, the Russian commander, thus faced the alternative of hastily attempting to concentrate his forces in the face of a strong Turkish army, or of retreating and thus exposing a large Armenian population to Turkish and Kurdish revenge.

The Russian main army withdrew along the right bank of the Euphrates, the Turks occupying the left bank and being held in partial check by rear guard actions. On August 1 Halil Bey overtook a considerable body of Russians at Palantchen, on the left bank of the Euphrates, twelve miles southwest of Kara Kilissa. A line was drawn from the northeast to the southwest from Darabi, six miles north of Kara Kilisso, to Djamschato, six miles southwest of the important Akhtunski Pass, covering the roads to Erivan.

In opposing this front the Turks exposed their communications, now 150 miles long, to attack from the direction of Sari Kamysh. On August 3 General Eudenitch moved his forces from the Sari Kamysh district southeastward, threatening General Halil Bey's flank and demonstrating against Erzerum. A Russian detachment marched rapidly by way of Ardos and Kara Derbent to Daiara, which is twenty miles west of Alaschgerd. One column had beaten the Turks out of the important Merghe Mir Pass, fifteen miles south of Kara Derbent, on August 8. Another, striking further eastward on the Alaschgerd road, obtained a decisive success on August 5 in the passes connecting Alaschgerd with Dutach in the Euphrates Valley.

The Russians by a bayonet attack drove the Turks from their trenches and captured several hundred prisoners. In the meantime the Russians had been successful on the main front east of Alaschgerd and the Turks were compelled to retreat southwestward along the Euphrates under threat of a flank attack at Dutach. Russian cavalry reached Dutach and another point on the Euphrates four miles northward on August 7.

The Turks lost three hundred prisoners at Dutach. Their total losess in the three weeks' campaign are estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 men, besides a large quantity of provisions and ammunition. The Russians are continuing the pursuit southward.

Russian military authorities declare the reinforcements now being sent to Halil Bey are recruits who have had little training and they express the belief that the Turks will have difficulty in assembling another army which would threaten the Russian forces on the Caucasus front.

Another communication says:

"On August 10 in the Passine Valley our troops after an engagement captured the important heights and drove back the Turks toward the west, taking a battalion commander and three other officers and three hundred men prisoners.

"In the direction of the Euphrates the pursuit of the Turks continues. Twenty-one hundred men have been taken prisoners."

CITY OF WARSAW SUFFERED LITTLE FROM RECENT BATTLES

LOZ, via London, Aug. 14.— The City of Warsaw, the centre of the recent colossal campaign for the Vistula line, suffered comparatively little from the battles which raged around it and from the process of its evacuation by the Russians. Although fears had been expressed that the Russians in leaving the city might repeat the century old precedent of Moscow, and set the town on fire, they did not do so. The water, gas and electric plants were left in working order, and only in Praga were the water mains damaged in several places by explosions.

The Russians retired in such haste at the last moment that they omitted to carry out many measures they had intended. A whole park of automobiles and carriages which had been collected for removal, were left behind. An order to carry off the church bells was only partly observed and many bells, even those in principal churches, were left hanging.

Most of the polish residents of the city declined to follow the order to leave the city with the Russians, generally escaping deportation by keeping out of sight.

The scenes on the night of the evacuation were dramatic. At ten o'clock in the evening a series of extraordinarily heavy explosions were heard signalizing the destruction of the forts. The sky over the city flamed red from burning military buildings and railway shops. The bridges were jammed with retiring troops or flooded with columns of artillery.

At five o'clock the next morning pioneers destroyed the three Vistula bridges. An hour later two German officers rode coolly through the city in an automobile to the Town hall where they met the chief of the Citizens' Committee. A few minutes after patrols of cavalry appeared, their lances decked with flowers and the men singing "Die Wacht am Rhein."

From the scene in the streets it might have been thought the event was a city festival. Crowds in gay summer attire thronged the thoroughfares, cheering the entering soldiers, while many offered flowers to them.

Meanwhile from the river front and even from overhead the noise of exploding shrapnel shells and the whiz of speeding bullets could be heard. Many casualties occurred in the city and ambulances were busy the entire day transporting the wounded to their homes or to hospitals.

Municipal affairs are in the hands of a Citizens' Committee, under the control of which a volunteer citizens' police force has been formed to preserve order.

The destruction of the railroad bridge was poorly carried out. The middle spans were wrecked and dropped into the river, but the piers were left standing, so it will take but a comparatively brief time to rebuild the structure and reopen railroad communication for Prince Leopold's armies.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

MANIFESTO DRAWS PROTEST FROM BERLIN

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The correspondent of Reuter's news agency at Amsterdam sends the following:

"The announcement from Vienna that the Austrian Polish Club, comprising Polish Deputies in the Austrian Reichsrath and the Galician Diet, has issued a manifesto demanding the reestablishment of the kingdom of Poland as an independent whole under the suzerainty of the Hapsburg monarchy has drawn a protest from the Vossische Zeitung, of Berlin, which declares:

"It is not in Cracow or in Lemberg that questions will be solved regarding the fruits of the war in which the German people and empire have exhibited a force unexampled in history."

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXARDER WASON

"I'm a Starbolt and I'll leave him saddled and tied by that blasted cottonwood in case he would be of any use to Tom Smith. Now, I've trusted you the limit so—cautious."

Old Baldy was still mutterin' Panther, but I actually do believe that Panther was glad to have his attention took by the noise. Insults that fail to pierce the skin, just have a pleasant tingle like scratchin' ye across scratched between the shoulders.

I slipped down, counted ten slick and as I've straightened up on my stride, the twilight air was sweet and refreshin' as it swept past. It seemed as though I had been gone a week, things had piled up so, but the truth was that it was just beginnin' to dusk up towards dark. I tried to shake it off but some way it seemed to me that Panther's goin' was a hint at what Tom Smith's was to be.

Panther had reached his peak when he had cleaned out his heart so he could kiss that baby's shoulder and not leave a brand; and then Shorty had fixed it so his heart couldn't change any more.

Tom Smith had reached his highest when he had cut loose from Belle Stern and given his honest love to Kate, an' I was he was in the net. Some repentance is mighty fine, but it won't stand much, and I feared that Tom Smith was another one who had to be called home while his chances were at their best. I didn't fear the law near as much as I feared what he might get if he tried to cut his way through the posse.

Most any of my friends can impose on me, though mighty few of 'em do it unbeknownst to me, but nothin' one of my friends can do to me alone, ever makes me hate 'em. Tom Smith had caused me a spell of bother by his vanity and his obstinacy, but there was somethin' in his eyes that held me fast, the same as it did those two girls, and I sure did set a heap of store by him. When the thought took possession of me that he had to die just because he had finally got fit to live, I switched around again, got soft and fierce, simultaneous, as always was my custom, and I made up my mind that there was sure goin' to be some poppin' before ever they took that boy away to his hangin'. Just at that minute the law held me about as firm as a spider-web would.

While I was thus slippin' along all engrossed up in my own thoughts, a shrill, harsh voice suddenly ordered me to throw up my hands, and a small-like feller ozed out of the cottonwoods and threw down on me. He was ridin' a picked hoss, wearin' a small mask, and beneath it was a young moustache—but I recognized him in a minute and instead of holdin' up my hands, I pulled off my hat and bowed with a respectful grin. "Good evenin', Miss Stern," sez I, and it was easy seen that she was a sight more took back than I was.

She sat her hoss gazin' at me in silence and tryin' to decide whether to run her bluff any farther or to come down off her perch. "Who are you?" she sez after a bit.

"Well," sez I, "part of the time I'm school teacher here at the Lion Head, but most of the time I'm the rub-dock on Tom Smith's waggon."

"You're Happy Hawkins, huh?"

"Yeh-up," sez I. "Who did you think I was?"

"I didn't care a hang," sez she. "They've got Tom Smith, as you call him, penned up, but they're never goin' to take him."

"Now, look here," sez I, "I don't want to interfere with any of your innocent pastimes, and you're welcome to kill off as many deputies as will quiet your nerves and put you back in a good humour; but the worst fix Tom Smith ever got into was the time your crowd killed Dave Kensington up in Kansas."

"We didn't do it," sez she; "but I'm mighty glad some one else did. They'd have strung him sure if they'd ever got him to Leavenworth."

"I know you all claim that you didn't do it, and I generally act as if I believed it myself," sez I; "but common sense tells me that no one else could gain anything by that killin' and no rooted animal I know of takes human life unless it happens to be useful to him. The best thing you can do is to just rode away and let this boy have the best chance he can. There isn't much they can actually prove on him now, but if you start anything new, why, that settles his standing for all time."

She put her gun back in its holster, pulled at her hat, shifted in her saddle, and heaved a sigh. "Oh, I can't tell!" sez she after a bit. "I wouldn't lay a straw in his way. I wouldn't honest; but I can't just sit with my hands folded while they take him. No, as sure as they put the cuffs on him or as sure as they start any shootin., why we'll cut in and any of 'em who ride back 'll sure have a tale to tell. We don't start nothin', but we'll do our best to end what the other side starts."

I studied a while. It was plain to be seen the' wasn't a thing could be done with a woman in the state this one was in, so I didn't propose to waste any more argument on her. "If he gets by this lunch at the house," sez I, "will you just let him ride without throwing in with him?"

"Yes, we'll do that," sez she, after takin' time to tighten up her grit.

"And supposin' this other girl goes with him—what then?" sez I.

Her bosom heaved and her hands clenched, but she headed straight into the wind. "We'll cover his retreat," sez she; "and I give you my word that he'll never know we were there—unless he plumb needs us, and even then I'll hang back until the boys reach their full limit. Don't think I'm makin' any play to get him back to me. I don't want him; he never was held to me by any rope except his own choice, and when he broke this, he broke the only rope that ever would hold me to him. I'm not even doin' this for his sake; I'm doin' it because—Well, because in spite of all I've done to kill it out of me, I'm still a woman, and I can't do anything else."

There was somethin' in her voice that warmed me clear to the bones and I held out my hand to her and she took it in a solid grip. "You're more of a man than most of 'em who work at it steady," sez I; "but there's so much real woman to ya, that if you cared one half as much for me as you do for him, there wouldn't be enough lookin'-glass heroes out of hell to split us apart. I'll do all I can for him, and I'll trust you the limit. Good-by."

She gave a little gulp as she squeezed hands with me and then I rode on to the house. I knew that what she wanted most was a chance to die fightin' for Tom Smith, but I also knew that she had a heart in her big enough to whip out this last yearnin' along with the rest of her desires, and she had put all the edge on me I had any wish to take care of.

The one thing that has left me muddlin' free to judge other men, was the fact that I allus classed myself in with 'em on the judgment, and right then I owned up that if that girl had ever taken it into her mind to put a bit in my mouth she could sure have driven me into any sort of fire she saw fit; so when I rode on I was still gentler in my judgment of Tom Smith, even while I saw plain enough that this new complication made matters a heap harder to deal with.

The next interruption I had was the sight of Flames pirutin' about in the trees. He was so crafty at it that I never would have noticed him if I hadn't been seekin' to see if I could locate the Stern boys. "Flames," I said in a low tone, "come here to me."

He came slow and sullen like a pup who knew he had a lickin' comin' to him but wasn't sure whether his master knew it or not. I had him tell me just how the posse was scattered and then I asked him if they paid any attention to what he did and he said they didn't.

"Now, Flames," I sez to him, with unexpected kindness, "the' wouldn't no stranger on earth take you to have a grain o' sense; but I know that you have a tol'able fair trace of it, and I'm goin' to put my dependence on you to the full. I want you to keep cases on everything that goes on here to-night and to post me up on all I don't see for myself. What I want you to do is to sneak up behind me and to whisper whatever you think I ort to know. If you whisper too loud, I'll cough, and if you whisper too low I'll snap my fingers. Allus blow the air out o' your lungs before you start to whisper, and then if you have to sneeze or anything, you won't break out into a yell. If you do the right thing, I'll reward you handsome, and if you don't"—I intended to say that I'd take off his hide and tan it, but I changed my mind and went on—"if you don't, I'll lose faith in all men."

Flames blew up his chest and I felt I had fixed him so he'd keep out of mischief for that night anyway, and I went on to the house.

IOWA WOMAN TELLS OTHERS

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Carried Her Safely Through Change of Life.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—"At the Change of Life the doctor said I would have to give up my work and take my bed for some time as there was no help for me but to lie still. I took Lydia E. OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Italian Girl's Vengeance

A Story of Sorrento

By F. A. MITCHEL

Sorrento, the famous Italian seaside resort, is built on a cliff several hundred feet high. The cliff is curved, the northern end flanked by Mount Vesuvius, the southern end pointing to the Mediterranean sea. The town is composed chiefly of hotels and villas, some of them set in the center of orange groves. At the base of the cliff are the homes of fisher folk, their boats moored on a narrow beach. There is no sea view in the world more beautiful than that from Sorrento. One may gaze upon the ever changing hue of the waters beneath, the islands of Ischia and Capri, here and there a ship or the little white steamer that carries passengers between Naples and the islands, while shoreward to the right is the cone Vesuvius with its mist of smoke about its summit.

Julian Hemstreet, a young American of fortune who was traveling abroad previous to settling down to the management of his estate, went to Sorrento and was so charmed with it that he was in no hurry to move on. Having sailor instincts he was drawn toward the shore directly beneath where the fleet of fishing craft was either hauled up on the beach or nodding at anchor.

Entering a wine shop, he asked a girl he found there how he should proceed to hire a boat. He knew enough of the Italian language to converse fairly well, and she gave him the necessary information. While she was doing so Julian ordered a liter of wine, which she brought and set on a table before him. There was nothing in the shop to look at except the girl, so Julian fixed his eyes upon her, and the nearer he looked the more he found food for admiration.

Lita—that was her name—was dressed in the costume of Italy, which has in it a good deal of color. Like all, or nearly all, Italians, she was brunette, with a wealth of black hair and eyes of a dark brown. She was comely in her way, but not beautiful; nevertheless there was a novelty for Julian in her makeup, especially her costume. It was not long before he was paying her compliments, which meant little to him, but meant much to the girl.

Julian, having learned where he could get a boat, went for a sail on the bay, for he was accustomed to handling such craft, and when he returned called at the shop for another liter of wine. He was a handsome fellow, entirely different from the men to whom the girl who served him had been accustomed. It is a question how far a man is responsible for a girl's falling in love with him. In this case Julian would not have prevented it even by refraining from the little compliments that he considered due any woman. She was confronted by that which dazzled her and was dazzled. Possibly if Julian had realized the damage being done he would have withdrawn, though later, when it became plain to him, he did no such thing. But then it would have been much more difficult to withdraw than at the beginning.

One morning Julian was in the orange grove that surrounded his hotel plucking the ripe fruit, when from another part of the grove came a ripple of feminine laughter, and a moment later a girl appeared from among the trees. On seeing a young man her features changed from mirth to seriousness and she passed on into the hotel.

There could be no greater difference between two women than between this girl and the Italian at the foot of the cliff. The former was a blond whose complexion was still soft as that of a child, a rose tint mingled with its whiteness. The eyes were blue, the hair what is commonly called golden. She was Mildred Twining, a member of an American family who were touring in Europe. Julian, who was of an age to be easily impressed with feminine beauty, was much pleased at the sudden change on the face of the girl on coming upon him so suddenly. Several other persons with whom she had been in the grove, including a child, followed her into the house, passing him closely, but so charmed was he with the girl that he took no note of the others.

Americans abroad are as prone to make friends with one another as they are to stand apart at home, and it was not long before Julian formed the acquaintance of the party of which Miss Twining was a member. The ease with which tourists become friends is extended to the sexes, and there is no more prolific source of uniting hearts than sightseeing in foreign lands. Julian Hemstreet attached himself to the Twining party, or, rather, to Mildred Twining, and everywhere they went he went.

One day Julian proposed to his new found friends to take them to sail on the bay. They accepted his invitation and, having descended to the beach, stood waiting while Julian was making preparation for the debarkation. Lita, the wine shop girl, saw the party and went out to watch them. When Julian handed Mildred on to the boat Lita was watching him and saw an expression on his face as he looked down into the blue eyes that caused within the Italian's bosom a commotion of jealousy, hate, revenge. But no one knew of it except herself. Julian was so wrapped in the girl he was handing into the boat that he did not even see the other. When the party returned from the sail Lita was screened from them by a window, through which she looked at Miss Twining with the eyes of a tigress.

Julian after his meeting with Miss Twining made no more visits to the wine shop. He did not realize the hold his personality had taken upon Lita, but was aware that he should have withdrawn from the latter's company sooner. Nevertheless he did not look upon the sudden flame he had inspired in her as of much importance. The fierceness of southern women in such matters did not occur to him. When he looked on Vesuvius, with its crest of smoke hanging lazily on its summit, he did not realize that down in the breast of the Italian girl there lurked a fire equal in intensity if not in force to that in the mountain.

One day when Julian and Mildred were rambling about the grounds of the hotel where they stopped they came upon a passage way leading down to the water. They concluded to go through it. On reaching the lower end they came upon a dock. There they stood looking out on the water. They were some distance from the wine shop, but Lita saw a couple on the dock and with the keen scent of love surmised that they were Julian and the girl who had stepped in between her and him.

Catching up a dirk knife and thrusting it into her bosom, she ran along the shore, now clambering between the water and the cliff, now stooping beneath some object to conceal her approach till she came near the dock on which the couple were standing unconscious of her approach; then, ducking under the side of the dock, she ran along it till she reached the margin of the water. There she stood listening to the pair on the dock, who were above her and a little further out from the shore.

Hemstreet was talking to his companion in English, a language the Italian girl did not understand. He was well educated, and the ancient Romans had always interested him. He was pointing out different objects of interest within view—the island Capri near by, Ischia in the distance to the north, and opposite what in old Roman times was a city of summer residences called Baiae, owned and occupied by wealthy Romans. He described the scene on that night nearly twenty centuries before when the bay spreading before them was dotted with galleys shooting here and there in the lurid light of the fires emitted by Vesuvius, those upon them engaged in trying the dangerous work of saving the fleeing Pompeiians, who were struggling in darkness under the cloud of ashes raining upon their devoted heads and burying their city, which now, after having been buried for twenty centuries, is being uncovered, to be visited every year by thousands of a civilization far different from that which passed slowly out of existence from the Italian peninsula.

Then Hemstreet spoke of the partings that took place on that eventful night, when parents, children, lovers lost one another in the darkness.

The only English word Lita knew was "love," and this she heard spoken by the man with whom she had become infatuated to her rival. Finally she drew out from under the dock where she could see them and, drawing the dirk from her bosom, aimed it at Mildred. Whether a slight sound she made was heard by Julian or whether there arose within him a premonition of danger he turned just as Lita started to threw the knife and barely in time to place himself between it and the intended victim. The knife entered his side, from which the blood gushed over the white summer suit he wore.

Lita stood aghast at what she had done, then with a cry sprang up the side of the dock just as Julian, sinking, was caught in Mildred's arms. Mildred, who had not seen the knife thrown, only knew that it was in her companion's side, but before she could act Lita pulled it out and threw it into the water, then with a kerchief she wore about her shoulders began to stanch the blood.

"Who did it?" cried Mildred.

"It was an accident," said Julian faintly.

Some men were working on a boat not far distant and Lita beckoned them to come. When they reached the dock Julian had fainted, but he soon revived and was carried to one of the houses on the beach. There he remained for a time, the surgeons undecided whether or not he would recover. No persuasion could induce him to declare how he had come by the wound, and Mildred Twining had not seen the knife thrown. Julian gave out a theory that some one concealed near him had thrown the knife at him for the purpose of rendering him a prey for robbery. But although there are many criminals in Italy the theory was not believed, for it would not be easy for any one to have lurked near him and get away after stabbing him without being seen.

Julian as soon as he was able to be moved was carried to the top of the cliff and lay at his hotel till he recovered. Miss Twining left with her party soon after he was out of danger, being the only one who did not suspect that the girl who had been near her and Julian at the time he was wounded had been his assailant. Julian joined Miss Twining later in Switzerland, and there resulted an engagement between them. But he kept his secret from her. Whether he ever saw Lita after the attempt on her rival's life is not known; probably not, since her people, knowing that she had committed a crime, sent her up into the mountains where she would not be attainable if called to an account.

Kidney Trouble?

The waste material which the Kidneys are intended to remove from the blood, if allowed to accumulate in the system, poison the blood and thus produce deleterious effects.

If from over-work, exposure to cold, or some local injury, the kidneys become congested or inflamed and cannot perform their functions, the system becomes filled with uric poisons.

Whenever a dull, heavy pain is felt over the region of the kidneys for any length of time, accompanied by a sallow complexion, loss of appetite, decrease of weight, and a puffy condition under the eyes and in the ankles, a chronic inflammation of the kidneys must be suspected, and if not relieved promptly chronic Bright's Disease will certainly develop.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, sold everywhere at 25c and 60c which is a Diuretic as well as an Aperient, will carry out of the system the poisonous material which the kidneys cannot get rid of, and will relieve the congestion of the kidneys.

Modern Buildings.

Probably not one out of every 10,000 buildings standing in all parts of the world and built by modern masons will be standing 300 years hence. We do not know how to put stones and bricks together as the ancients did, and consequently the buildings we raise nowadays are really mere temporary structures and will be in ruins when the ancient buildings of Greece and Egypt, built thousands of years ago, are in as good condition as they are now.

They Do Their Share.

Milton complained of his wife that she did not talk to him enough. Three hundred years have wrought a change. When Matthew Arnold visited this country a woman with more zeal than discretion asked him:

"Mr. Arnold, will you tell me what is the most novel impression you have received in the United States?"

"Certainly, madam," he replied, with perfect English suavity. "The women do all the talking."—Youth's Companion.

Supposed Danger to the Eye.

Many people believe that certain modern illuminants are dangerous to the eyes on account of their ultra violet or actinic radiations. Dr. Louis Bell and Dr. F. H. Verhoeff have made an extensive investigation of the effects of radiation on the various parts of the eye, from the corneal epithelium back to the retina. In an article in Science the investigators report that no artificial source of light produces enough ultra violet radiation to be of the slightest danger to the eye. Such pathologic or injurious action as they have been able to detect experimentally from ultra violet rays is confined to a strictly limited region of the spectrum, and perfectly definite laws govern its quantity and effect. Actual experiments on the human eye show conclusively that no concentration of radiation on the retina from any artificial illuminant is great enough to produce injury under any practical conditions. Protective glasses are useful only, they conclude, in cutting off dazzling light.

The Beauty Spot Patch.

The custom of wearing black patches to make the skin seem fairer came from the habit of applying to the sixteenth century pieces of black velvet or other dark stuff to the temples for the headache. A fashionable coquette discovered that these were becoming and brought them into use in France, whence the custom spread into Europe. They were worn not only by women, but by exquisites, though their use was not general among men. They were called mouches and were made round, square, oval and in the shape of stars, hearts, crescents and animals of all sorts, so that a lady's face sometimes had the appearance of a menagerie.

Skirts Not Shorter But Fuller

[illegible] not going to be shorter but fuller. Fancy [illegible] but no shorter. One fashion expert [illegible] would be shorter, but no [illegible] from Peterborough has been trying to dress in khaki and summer with a military belt and a one but she isn't ready yet to [illegible] with the magpies. So the skirts will remain at the summer length, and scallops are passing away leaving few to mourn them.

To be extremely smart the Peterborough girl must have tie shoes, and a virulent attack, preferably in navy taffeta. Unless checked George street will by mid-August be past a term of navy blue costumes, short dresses and tailored suits. But the tailored suits are correct, and may be worn with tan toxy blue hats with perhaps a white band very much studied, and a film of white chiffon in a blouse.

Bulky Coats Go.

The large, bulky coats of early [illegible] which made a maiden resemble a humming top stepped on and bent crooked have met a well-deserved fate and are seen no longer. In their stead trim tailored suits of palm beach, corduroy and serge are worn with silk sweater coats for outings. Some of the prettiest of these are in black and white stripes with collars of white. They have a jaunty grace suggestive of canoe and moonlight and Canada in vacation time.

A remarkable change is coming over the summer attire of Peterborough. The smartness of the suit for a street costume as compared with the separate blouse and skirt worn earlier is growing upon our consciousness. For that reason all sorts of dainty summer suits, some in white piqué or the newer white panama, with eton pockets, others in navy taffeta, poplin and linens are seen everywhere down town on well-dressed women. The very sheer summer gowns are not liked for street wear, as they once were. In fact Peterborough is growing up and away from the country maiden who wore her sunbonnet and gingham gown to town. Downtown is a big, startling curious cold place and suits are more comfortable than they seem.

Freak Shoes Discarded.

Another welcome fashion change is that the freak shoes are being discarded. Peterborough did not buy them. A few girls with great courage appeared in shoes of white with black trimmings here and there, and with shoes that bared up inside, and resembled surgical bandages, but the buying public said "I want shoes, not jig-saw puzzles" and the buying public being important, has ruled the day. For the winter plain black shoes of finest materials, mostly laced, and a few with the dark coloured tops will be seen.

Nobody is quite sure yet where her waistline is going to be, but portents are all in favour of none at all meaning a princess gown. This silhouette peered round at the door last autumn and was terrified away by the crinolines. The twentieth century wouldn't wear the crinolines except on the stage, where they were tremendously admired and left. But if material is really going to be scarce, and all of Europe tells us it is, the princess gown sounds quite reasonable. Properly made, with funny tight sleeves, accordeon pleating around the bottom showing a frou-frou of lace, and enclosing milady with her hair brushed softly back, low down and coiled in the very newest Madonna knot, it really could look rather attractive, you know. The Madonna knot is going to be fascinating when her hair has been spanked and coaxed into behaving itself after a wild summer of bobbed freedom. Then won't she be the demure thing this winter.

Fret and the way looks dreary,
Laugh, and the path is bright

CAUSES OF SLOW PROGRESS ON THE WESTERN FRONT

Vast Amount of Shells Needed for Advance Could Not Have Been Imagined Before the War—Enemy Trenches Veritable Forts

PARIS, Aug. 13—An explanation of why so little progress is being made in the French and Belgian war zones so far as actual ground gaining is concerned is afforded in a statement from unquestionable authority in which the almost insurmountable difficulties of the present struggle are set forth.

"During the last six months," says the authority "from the North Sea to the Swiss mountains, there has been siege warfare along the length of the broken line of trenches. In this warfare all strategic manoeuvres are absent, because manoeuvres are impossible on ground where every square meter is marked and swept by artillery fire. The only alternative is a frontal attack. Such an attack is smashed to pieces in one part or another against the formidable organizations of defence, in which all the resources of art and science have been employed by the two adversaries.

"In concrete subterranean works, armored and casemated, flanked with rapid firers and mortars, and linked to one another by marvelously concealed communication trenches which are protected by the fire of heavy batteries, dwell the infantry abundantly provided with rifles and hand grenades. To take possession of one of these works it is first necessary to dismantle these trenches and destroy the material which they shelter. This is the artillery's task.

Shells Required are Revelation.

"No one before the war could have imagined the vast amount of shells required. Several thousand shells fired during a few hours on a restricted space announce an attack for which this preparation is being made.

"But no matter how numerous the heavy guns or how well directed their fire, it often happens that the preparation has been insufficient. One or two rapid firers now down the troops who climb from the trenches ready for the charge, and after suffering heavy sacrifices the attacking party arrive at the first line of the trenches of the enemy. The opposing artillery, with a literal wall of fire, effectively prevents any reinforcements from advancing to their support. They must fortify the captured trenches, being subjected the while to a much more accurate bombardment, as the enemy knows the exact range of their former positions.

"Such offensive movements could not be multiplied nor prolonged indefinitely, as much on account of the moral and physical effort which they demand of the men as on account of the losses which they involve. Neither can such offensives be improvised. Before beginning an attack, large quantities of material and projectiles must be gathered in the place previously appointed by the commander, advanced fortifications dug, and the ground minutely studied.

Every Western Offensive Costly.

"If, despite these difficulties, the French army renews an offensive at the price of a bloody sacrifice, it is with the conscientious mission of holding large enemy forces on the western front. By the Marne victory it stopped the invasion and ruined the first German plan, which was first to shatter France and return then against Russia.

"By the victory of the Yser, with the aid of the allied armies closing the line of defence, it effectively prevented the enemy from getting a foothold in Pas de Calais.

"By continuous offensive actions from February to July in Champagne the Argonne and Artois, it demoralized approximately 2,000,000 men and captured an enormous amount of material. Without allowing the enemy an instant's respite, it forced the German general staff to utilize on the western front reserves in barracks and arsenals.

"It would be a serious mistake to measure our effort by the ground conquered. The demoralization and wearing down of the German army is the real goal.

"We have attained this goal, since it has been proved that during these six months the enemy has suffered heavy losses and taking everything in to consideration he can only remove from our front eight per cent. of his total effectiveness."

Jeroboam Leads Israel Into Sin. I. Kings 12 25-33

Golden Text. Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, not any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth, thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them. Exodus 20 4, 5a

1. Verse 25. Where were Shechem and Penuel situated?

2. Verses 26, 27. In view of God's promise to him (1 Kings 11 38) did Jeroboam have any reason to fear that his people would forsake him?

3. What is the relation between doubt of God's promises and disobedience to God's commandments? Would you say that the former is always caused by the latter?

4. Which tends more to faithfulness to God, adversity or prosperity, and why is it so?

5. If Jeroboam had been faithful to God would there have been any possibility that his people would return to Rehoboam?

6. Was Jeroboam's doubt of his people caused by any unfaithfulness in them, or wholly by his own guilty fear? Give your reasons.

7. What would you say causes the majority of our fears, and why is it so?

8. What would have been the probable result if Jeroboam had allowed his people to go to Jerusalem to worship?

9. Verses 28-30. Did Jeroboam act wisely, or wickedly, in preventing the people from going to Jerusalem to worship? Why?

10. If you had been in the place of Jeroboam would you have prevented them from going up to Jerusalem to worship?

11. If Jeroboam had provided for purely spiritual worship at Bethel and Dan what would God's attitude have been to such an action?

12. What would you say was Jeroboam's real sin in this matter?

13. Verses 31-33. How much and are pictures, or statuary of the saints, or high-class music, to the spiritual worship of the unseen God?

14. What can you say for or against banquets, and similar functions in the church, when they are held for fellowship and not for money making?

15. What did Jeroboam mean the tow garden calves to represent?

16. What is the ethical and religious value of obeying the Golden Text, not to use any outward symbol whatsoever to represent God?

17. Jeroboam no doubt, meant the two golden calves to represent the true God, as the Egyptians used the same symbol to represent their God Apis, but what has history shown to be the result of using such images as an aid to worship?

18. Was such public worship as Jeroboam established accepted by God as true worship when engaged in by truly devout souls? Why?

19. What is the most success-ful way to help us to a true and vivid conception of the Almighty God, our heavenly father, and of his son our saviour Jesus Christ? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the class.)

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

BUNNY BITE.

Heat a pound of American cheese broken into bits, one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of sauce, small coffee cup of fresh beet and six eggs beaten up. Add cayenne pepper and salt.

Heat the butter and melt the cheese in it, stir in seasonings, including beet, then add the beaten eggs, stirring the mixture incessantly as they cook. Serve on hard sippets of brown bread toast buttered and hot.

Spice Cake.

Put into a pan one cup of sugar, one cup of Porto Rico Molasses and two-thirds of a cup of butter. All one cup hot coffee that has been turned over a teaspoonful of soda and stirred till it stopped "purring." Mix well, then add one-half pound of seeded raisins, a teaspoonful each cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg, and about three cups of flour or enough to make as stiff as fruit.

For Dry, Solit Hair.

It is impossible to arrange the hair attractively if it is dry and split on the ends. There is no reason for this dry hair if you will practice the following treatment. Several times a week rub on your scalp a little castor oil. If you wish to make the odour of the oil more pleasant, have the druggist add oil of lavender to it. Do not fail to massage the scalp and brush the hair daily, if you wish to restore it to a healthy condition.

Thin Folks Who Would Be Fat

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

Id certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds, and stay that way," declares every excessively thin man or woman. Such a result is not impossible, despite past failures. Thin people are victims of malnutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of the food from being taken up to the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines where they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal, amount of fat, the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be done by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength giving, fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by good druggists everywhere and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

CAUTION While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous indigestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

The hatching of eggs by artificial heat has been practiced in China and Egypt since prehistoric times, huge brick ovens being used in the latter country.

Blood Thin and Weak Too Nervous to Sleep

Here is Another Case in Which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Proved Its Great Reconstructive Influence

Thin blood and exhausted nerves usually go together. A considerable portion of the blood is constantly consumed in keeping up the vitality of the nervous system. Once the blood is deficient, either in quantity or quality, the nerves suffer and bodily pains result. Headaches, neuralgic or sciatic pains are the indications in some cases, while in others weakness, nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness are the most marked symptoms.

Mrs. R. F. Catlin, Elm Springs, Sask., writes: "For years I was troubles with nervousness, and could not sleep nights. Also had lack of colour as a result of the blood being thin and weak. My husband saw Dr. Chase's Nerve Food advertised, and got some for me, and wanted me to try it. I did so and it has proven a wonderful help for me. By enriching the blood, it has restored colour to my face and has built up the nervous system so that I rest and sleep well. It is a pleasure to recommend so excellent a medicine."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food goes direct to the formation of pure, rich blood, and for this reason is the most certain means of increasing the quality as well as the quantity of blood in the human system. The feeble, wasted nerves are restored, and through the nervous system new vigor and energy is imparted to every organ and member of the body.

You will be surprised at the way this food enriches puts new strength and vitality into the weakened body. And the best of it is that the benefits are both thorough and lasting. In this the Nerve Food differs from mere stimulating medicines which give rise to false hope and when discontinued leave you as weak as before. Put this great restorative treatment to the test and prove its merits in your own cases. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A SLIP FOR THE HOUSEHOLD TREASURE

By Anabel Worthington.

The dear little waifs from the sky who come to us regardless of season are fortunate in having fashions with a degree of permanence unknown to other departments. It makes no difference whether we be blessed with a little lad or a wee bit lassie, the same frock will do for both. The materials are always the same, white and soft and as fine as our purse and our habits of life will permit us to make them. Batiste is not expensive and it comes nice and wide, saving much sewing in the making, and of late we have seen little slips made of a very light quality of wash silk. This, however, hardly seems as suitable as the fine cotton fabrics.

The slip which is shown in the illustration has the usual seams at the shoulder and side, and the little sleeves are tiny puffs which may be made long or short. The dress closes in the back and a frill of lace finishes the high neck. The embroidery design was made specially for this dress and is shaped to fit the little yoke line. It is No. 8293 T and costs 10 cents. As several impressions of it can be taken, it may be used for more than one slip. With it be used instead of a plain hem if preferred.

The slip pattern, No. 7220, is cut in one size. To make it requires 2⅛ yards of 40 inch material and 1⅛ yards of lace edging.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

20 PER CENT. MARRIED MEN

In Canadian Forces — Canada Pays Her Soldiers $125,000 a Day.

OTTAWA, Aug. 11—The pay roll of the Department of Militia shows that the percentage of married men in the Canadian forces is approximately twenty. Canada is paying out to her soldiers in the Dominion, in England and at the front $125,000 per day, or about $45,000,000 per year, and this sum is rapidly increasing.

Twenty-five thousand checks for separation allowance are issued per month. A total of $15,000,000 per year is paid to the wives and families of married soldiers, and about $12,000,000 of assigned pay.

A SPLENDID WAY TO REDUCE ONE'S WEIGHT

There is perhaps no one thing that shows the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 25 or 30. However young our face may appear, our figure gives us away.

The cause of this over-stoutness is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce a proper combustion to destroy the fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good druggist and get oil of orisene in capsule form and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. One of orisene taken at meal times gives you at the benefit of the food you eat and at the same time destroys the fatty tissue from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1,400 Montreal, Can.

Wells in India.

The question of wells in India is complicated by the co-existence in each community of two castes—the pure Hindus and Gonds on the one hand the weavers on the other. No weaver may draw from the well of the Hindus lest it be defiled nor will the Hindu drink from the hands of the weaver. Thus it becomes necessary either to dig two wells or to depute a certain number of the Hindus to give water to their exalted fellow villagers.

Meat on a Spit

It was the custom in ancient times to serve roast meat on a spit, and to pass it round the table for each one to cut off what he liked. In Persia one still finds chicken livers and hearts served on small spits.

It is probable that many persons continued to prefer their meat served on spits even after these were no longer in use, and in general use for centuries, as certainly happened at the court of which Charles XII chose to carry his love with his royal name.

ALLIES VICTORIOUS AT THE DARDANELLES

ENEMY UNABLE TO WITHSTAND BRITISH BAYONET CHARGES

BRITISH TROOPS CAPTURE STRONG TURKISH POSITIONS AT THE DARDANELLES

Six Hundred Prisoners Were Captured----British Reinforcements Have Made Another Successful Landing and Now Occupy Positions Along the Cliffsr--French Cruiser Destroys Munition Factories at Jaffa

FRENCH OFFICIAL COMMUNIQUE

PARIS, Aug. 14.—After violent combats the British troops have captured the Turkish trenches on the slopes of Sari Bair and obtained a strong foothold in the Ari Burnu region, it was officially announced here to-day. The British took six hundred prisoners in these operations. The battle was continuing when official despatches were filed to the French War Office, with the English artillery breaking down the Turkish trenches on a two hundred yard front. The Turks are making gallant counter attacks, but have been unable to withstand the English artillery fire and bayonet charges. British reinforcements have landed successfully at Suvla Bay, north of Ari Burnu, despite the enemy's opposition, and now occupy positions along the cliffs. From this region the British are advancing southward toward Gaba Tepe. French troops have advanced slightly, their artillery holding back several Turk attacks.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—(French Official Communique). Heavy German attacks along a wide front in the Maria Therese region were repulsed, the enemy suffering unusually heavy losses. The Germans bombarded the French works in the Argonne for several hours before dusk. Infantry actions were begun at night and continued throughout the night, the Teutons smashing at the French trenches, apparently under orders to break through at any cost. Fighting continued into the early hours of the morning, but every German onslaught was repulsed. Around Souchese and Chateau Car Leul the usual grenade fighting occurred throughout the night without important changes.

BERLIN CLAIMS A SUCCESS.

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 14. General Von Hindenberg's forces attacking the fortress of Kovno have stormed and captured the fortified forest of Dominikanka, in front of Kovno. "North of Novo Georgievsk," said this afternoon's official statment, "we stormed and captured a strong position, taking 1,800 prisoners."

ENEMY AMMUNITION FACTORIES DESTROYED.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—A French cruiser bombarded and destroyed the Wagner works at Jaffa, on the Palestine coast, the Ministry of Marine announced to day.

The bombardment was ordered, it was explained, because the Germans were manufacturing arms and ammunition and boats for the Turkish armies at the Dardanelles in the factory buildings.

The commander of the cruiser first notified the Turkish Governor of the district that he intended to destroy the buildings, and gave the inhabitants at Jaffa time to leave the city, many of them moving out over the railway towards Jerusalem.

The factories were then blown to pieces.

LATEST WEAPON OF DESTRUCTION.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Latest despatches from the front indicate that the Germans have adopted a new weapon in the shape of aeroplane darts from aeroplanes carrying explosive liquid fire, which ignites everything inflamable within three yards of the place where it falls. It is causing many casualties, some among the Canadian troops, notably the Royal Canadian Dragoons.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The British steamer Cairo, 1,671 tons, was sunk by a German submarine. The crew was landed to day.

IRISH MAIL TRAIN WRECKED TEN PERSONS REPORTED KILLED

NORTHAMPTON, Eng., Aug. 14.—Ten persons were officially reported killed by the derailment of the Irish mail train of the London and North Western Railway, near Stowe Tunnel.

Three trains were piled up in the collision. The Irish mail was running in two sections, and was carrying holiday makers away from London. The first section ran into an overturned engine of the south bound train, whose piston rod had snapped. The second section following immediately behind charged into the wreckage. Among the victims were several soldiers.

TREE CUTTING UNDER CONTROL OF ENGINEER

Board of Works Passes Recommendation Affecting Companies Having Rights on Streets

WHAT OTHER CITIES DO

If any trees in the city's street are to be removed or cut, the Board of Works recommends to the Council that permission must first be obtained from the City Engineer.

"I see where the City Engineer comes in for some knocking on that" said Mr. Parsons, with prevision developed by experience, at the meeting of the Board last night.

To which Mayor Buller added by way of consoling the C. E.: "You will get it any way. You might as well take a few more knocks."

The resolution, moved by Ald. Duffus, seconded by Ald. Edgar, applies in particular to the Utilities Commission, the Telegraph and Telephone Companies, Street Railway and Fire Department.

It appears that the city has a man engaged in trimming trees and in this connection Ald. Edgar stated that he had heard a "lot of kicking about the way the trees are being chopped." He mentioned Mr. R. H. Hunter as one citizen who had reported to him and added that when Mr. Hunter's daughter had remonstrated with the city's trimmer the latter told her to go in the house.

Ald. Green "I don't believe our men told anyone to go in the house."

Ald. Edgar "I had it from Mr. Hunter, himself."

Mayor Buller dismissed the subject with the remark that "people say a lot they dont mean."

Tree Trimming in Other Cities.

In answer to letters sent out by City Clerk Armstrong asking for a description of the method of caring for trees in other cities, a reply from Guelph that the trimming was under the control of a Park Board and no one is allowed to cut trees without permission. Where roots obstruct sewers the cost of repairing damaged connections is paid by the City.

Brantford has a Building and Grounds Committee to safeguard its trees. When roots break through sewer connections the city pays the expense of removing the obstruction outside the street line, and the citizen pays for it when the work is necessitated on his private property.

Hamilton has a supervising Park Board. The city clears sewer connections of roots without cost to the property owners.

St. Thomas conditions are somewhat similar to Peterborough's. The work of protecting the trees in that municipality is in the hands of the city, and is by no means satisfactorily carried out. Since the Hydro has been developing in St. Thomas there has been a continual howl from property owners about the manner in which they have been putting up their work presumably through the trees. The city clerk concluded with the statement that the city has to do the best they can and take the kicks.

Will Buy Band Instruments in Toronto Monday

Private Peryer Will Make the Purchase for the 59th Battalion Band—Other Military News

Private W. H. Peryer, late bandmaster of the Salvation Army Band, is said to be slated for the leadership of the 59th. Battalion Band now in formation. He will go to Toronto on Monday, where he will meet Adjt. McConnell of the 59th, and purchase the necessary instruments for the Battalion's musicians. If they arrive in time next week these instruments will be used by the band recruits who will begin their practices at once. If they are not received, it is the intention to borrow the local 57th Band's instruments for a few days. Before next week is over it is expected that the recruits will have their own band for their marches. This provision is being taken up with enthusiasm, but there are still a few vacancies to be filled by local bandsmen. If twenty men are secured from Peterborough, the 59th Battalion Band will practically be an all-Peterborough organization. This is regarded as an extra incentive to local players.

Capt. Maurice Park proposes to gradually increase the route marches next week, thereby developing the efficiency of the men, but by easy stages. By next Saturday he hopes to be able to cover a fairly long route.

Some one remarked to-day "It's a good thing for recruiting that so many British born came to this country.

There is no welcome on the Armouries' mat for police court producers. One of them was sent up this morning but he didn't get by.

A Toronto man who blew in from Lindsay this week, said he didn't think of applying to enlist at those centres. He didn't give a satisfactory account of his travels and no effort was made to detain him. However, he is reported to have got several meals from the caretaker.

Look them over and you'll find that Peterborough's recruits are gentlemen. Their behaviour during the past two weeks has been most exemplary at the Armouries and on the streets.

NASSAU BRIDGE NOT FIT FOR HEAVY TRAFFIC

Superintendent Killaly of the Trent Canal stated to the Examiner today that the bridge at Nassau was not fit for heavy traffic. He desired to warn the public who might be travelling that way. The floor of the bridge is weakening, and while it is safe for light traffic, it would not be advisable to venture with too heavy a load on it at the present time.

FAREWELL AT CENTRAL PARK

The local artillery recruits will leave for Barriefield on Monday night at 9 o'clock from the G.T.R. station. While the exact number of the recruits for Monday night's departure is not a certainty to-day it will likely reach forty or over.

A civic farewell to these recruits will take place at the armouries or Central Park Monday night. The massed bands will fall in at 8 o'clock, and at 8:30 His Worship Mayor Buller will address the men. The infantry recruits will fall in at 8:15 and afterwards escort their comrades to the G.T.R. station with bands accompanying them.

PLAYED WITH LOADED GUN ----WAS INSTANTLY KILLED

Little Clarence Guerin, son of Mrs. Noel Guerin, Shot This Morning on Farm in Douro

WAS ON A HOLIDAY

While playing with a loaded rifle this morning, at the home of Miss Katherine Crough, on the 3rd Concession of Douro, Clarence Guerin, the eight-year-old son of Mrs. Noel Guerin of this city, was fatally shot. The youth, had, who was an inmate of St. Vincent de Paul Orphanage, went out to Miss Crough's for a holiday about two weeks ago. Edgar Weegl, a young man employed on the farm, owned the rifle with which the little fellow was playing when the accident occurred. Not knowing the firearm was loaded he discharged it, receiving the contents in such a manner as to cause almost instant death.

An effort was being made to communicate with Coroner Dr. Greer, but without success, as he is out of the city.

The victim of the fatality was a bright little chap and a great favourite among his playmates. Two sisters and four brothers, besides his parents, survive him.

A STUDY OF THE PRESENT COALITION GOVERNMENT

Premier Asquith Had a Stormy Passage at the Outset—Unionist Members of the Cabinet Rallied Around Him

LET HALDANE GO

Copyright, 1915, Central News
By T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, Aug. 14. Premier Asquith is to-day more firmly fixed in his position of ascendancy over the parties and men of Great Britain than ever, despite the precautions he seemed to have in the first days of the coalition cabinet.

To every close student of parliamentary history the spectacle and the results of the coalition government in England presents interesting studies. The new government started under the most unfavourable auspices, and for some weeks it looked as if it were certain to be shipwrecked almost before it had started on its adventurous voyage.

Indeed it nearly came to grief within the first few days of its existence over the question of the appointment of Mr. Campbell to the Lord Chancellorship of Ireland. Liberal opinion was in a restive condition. The Labour men were approaching open revolt, and the Irish, of course, had to fight against the Campbell appointment or relax very much their interest in Irish opinion, that is, which is quite-same, which means nine hundred and ninety nine out of every thousand Irish Nationalists.

Bonar Law a Bitter Pill.

The political differences between the members of the new government were aggravated in some cases at least by strong personal antipathies. I remember as one of the tragic scenes of my life that time I met Mr. Asquith outside the House of Commons within a few minutes after he had been subjected to a very wicked and unjustifiable attack by Bonar Law on his announcing that he intended to put the Home Rule bill on the Statute Book. He looked pale, depressed almost in despair, though he maintained that curious quietude of manner and outward appearance of Yorkshire stoicity which never deserts him. Mr. Asquith is not a man who harbours resentment, but he did resent that attack and remembered it, and I am sure that one of the bitterest pangs of his experiences in making the new coalition ministry was that he had to sit side by side with a man who he thought had assailed him so unfairly.

Had to Let Haldane Go.

Nor did the anxieties of the harassed Prime Minister end there. He is a man of some few warm friendships, and among those [illegible] were put most of long years' standing, and Lord Haldane was one of these. Bonar Law a Bitter Pill.

The political differences between the members of the new government were aggravated in some cases at least by strong personal antipathies. I remember as one of the tragic scenes of my life that time I met Mr. Asquith outside the House of Commons within a few minutes after he had been subjected to a very wicked and unjustifiable attack by Bonar Law on his announcing that he intended to put the Home Rule bill on the Statute Book. He looked pale, depressed almost in despair, though he maintained that curious quietude of manner and outward appearance of Yorkshire stoicity which never deserts him. Mr. Asquith is not a man who harbours resentment, but he did resent that attack and remembered it, and I am sure that one of the bitterest pangs of his experiences in making the new coalition ministry was that he had to sit side by side with a man who he thought had assailed him so unfairly.

Had to Let Haldane Go.

Presented With Wrist Watches

Two Employees of The Examiner Leaving For The Front

The employees of the Examiner foregathered to-day for the purpose of recording the departure of Pte. Lynn Callander and Pte. Maurice Dunkley, two employees of the Examiner, who have volunteered for overseas service. They were presented with wrist watches accompanied by the following address:

Messrs. Lynn Callander and Maurice Dunkley.

Your fellow employees of the Examiner admire and applaud you for your pluck and patriotism in enlisting for active service. You have set a splendid example to other young men to whom the call comes. As you have left good positions on our staff, where you have given good and faithful service, to accept his/her service, and as we feel sure you will, do your duties as faithfully to your country, fight as well for Canada as you have worked for the Examiner, you will be a credit to your native city and help win the victory we are fighting for.

That you may have some token that the friends you leave behind are remembering you, take these little gifts which betoken our esteem for you and our hearty good wishes for good luck and a safe return and that the Examiner as we feel sure it will do, will have the opportunity of recording the fact that you have fought a good fight and brought hope and victory to your country and honour to our colours and credit to your native city and yourselves.

Signed on behalf of the employees of the Evening Examiner.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, AUG. 14, 1915

KAKHI AND RECRUITING.

It is admitted that one of the drawbacks to recruiting is the inability of the recruiting officials to invite young men to put on His Majesty's uniform. There is no Majesty's uniform to put on. The Government answers the objection by asserting that there are plenty of uniforms. Then, for goodness sake send them on. They are no good in the warehouses; their place is on the recruit's back, the moment he has taken the oath of allegiance. The kakhi is the seal to his oath. The British soldiers in the Crimea when they were suffering and freezing from lack of clothing and supplies, were not very much "warmed and filled" by the fact that there were stacks and stacks of clothing, in store, but tied down, anchored, by red tape. If the Government has uniforms send them on, to make recruits soldiers, and encourage others to enlist.

In this connection a suggestion has been made, that in case the permission to raise a battalion in Peterborough is accorded, the clothing equipment should be provided in Peterborough. Our merchants and our manufacturers of clothing are by no means overworked these days. We can manufacture the cloth for uniforms in Peterborough, and local establishments could do the making, of course, under Government inspection. That would give employment, promote circulation of money in town, and at the same time, be in accord, at once, with considerations of local, national and imperial patriotism. It seems the proposal is practicable; if not so immediately, it can be with a little energy, made practicable. By doing this we can help relieve the pressure in other places of the manufacture of uniform clothing, and at the same time help ourselves by stimulating home industrial and mercantile conditions, that are not now entravagantly active.

THE RATIO OF RECRUITING.

That the spirit of recruiting and the results of recruiting should vary in different localities of the Dominion, is a fact, that cannot be disputed, nor can it satisfactorily be explained, except in relation to certain provinces of the Dominion. Figures have been compiled by the Militia Department which show a wide range of percentage of recruits to population; varying from 61-100 per cent. in Quebec to 3.73 per cent. in Alberta.

In Ontario, where, according to the claims of some politicians, all the loyalty and interest in the Empire are centred—the bulwark as we are told of national and imperial interests—in Ontario the percentage of enlistment to population is only 1.44.

The high percentage in Alberta and Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia—averaging 2.44 per cent., is partially explained by the fact that there is in all new countries a larger proportionate number of unattached young men, and to the further fact that there is a larger percentage of British-born in these provinces, the figures of enlistment showing that there is a far larger percentage of British-born enter the ranks than of Canadian-born, though there is a far greater number of Canadian-born eligible for service.

In the Province of Quebec the lower percentage of enlistments can be accounted for in two ways. In the first place the percentage of British-born in the population is only 3.3, while in other provinces it is as high as 27.3 per cent.—in British Columbia and 13.8 per cent. in Ontario.

But there is a far more logical and regrettable cause of slackness of enlistment in Quebec. In a word it is Nationalism, represented largely by Henri Bourassa, its chief apostle, and Le Devoir, its journalistic mobthpiece. It is known that the essential spirit of Nationalism is sectionalism and hostility to British institutions.

Nationalism, whatever its place in our national life has been, is at present performing in effect the work of German seditionists. From the beginning it has filled the popular mind with false ideas of "British tyranny" —in forcing compulsory naval or military service. The old wives' fable that a Canadian navy was to be an instrument of tearing sons from their mother's arms by force to be "disembowelled in fighting British wars." was sown broadcast by Nationalist emmissaries, helped by the party that adopted Nationalism, and assisted at its birth—gave it organized form and substance—when it received the imprimatur of the party opposed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and was used by it as an instrument in his political destruction; and has since been fostered and encouraged—till to-day it is an element in the forces fighting against the interests of the Empire; and accounts largely for the relative slow rate of recruiting forces in Quebec to fight for the Empire.

Nationalism has poisoned the Quebec mind; is doing the work of Germany by exciting hostility to British institutions and ideals. This is shown by the fact that since Sir Wilfrid Laurier, by his ringing appeals for recruiting, has shown the falsity and wickedness of the Nationalist claim that Britain is a tyrant to the French-Canadians, enlistment has sensibly increased.

This is proof that Nationalism is the enemy of the Empire, and operates as an agency of Germany's plan of stirring up sedition, and sowing dissension to weaken the Empire and lessen the numerical and fighting value of its forces.

Denunciation of its evil functions, and exposure of the falsity of the claims of Nationalism, will be only partially effective so long as it is recognized, and protected, and sustained, and preserved, in the very government of the country. The Government of Canada has behind it the loyal support of all classes of citizens. It is, in other ways, doing its best to help the cause of the Empire in this war. But it has embodied in it an element actually and morally hostile to recruiting; hostile to British ideals and British interests.

While some members of the cabinet, with prominent members of the opposition, are touring the country making recruiting appeals, in the name of British freedom, there are members of the Government in power, and with influence of their kind, who have preached and have not recanted, the traitorous gospel, that French-Canada especially, "has no use for England and the English," since they had to "shoot holes through the flag to breathe the air of liberty." With a man of such sentiments and others of his kidney, sitting in the Council Chamber of Canada and of His Majesty's advisers, he and they are bound to have a sinister influence upon the loyalty and elan of the French-Canadian people who have by his means and by the means of those that think with him, had their minds poisoned by the disloyal gospel of Nationalism, as the people of Germany have been poisoned by the frightful cult of force.

Now, when the whole energy of the nation is called upon; when the solid unity of action in helping the Empire is demanded of every mother's son in Canada, is the time to cast Nationalism and its works out of our national life; to depose it from a place of authority in our government.

Whatever justification Nationalism had in promoting party success, it has become an evil thing and should be cast out. Now is Sir Robert Borden's opportunity to straighten out the line of battle, to eliminate the Nationalist salient, that is thrusting its sinister influence into our recruiting booths; to deprive it at least of official national recognition.

The great need of the Empire at the moment is men. While we in Peterborough, through a comparatively insignificant organization like the Speakers' Patriotic League, are striving to the utmost to remove every obstacle to recruiting, to stir the spirit of patriotism by appeals to the highest feelings of our people, we have in the sister province especially, a sinister hostility to the interests of recruiting and the interests of the Empire operating silently but effectively; and the more effectfvely because it has the encouragement of official apotheosis of its anti-British, anti-imperial, and anti-Canadian spirit.

We are all one in this fight, and we should be all one in spirit. Everybody is fighting in some way. Even our women, sacrificing their leisure and home duties and enjoyments, are selling ice cream at patriotic gatherings to give their share of help in the fight. It is enough for us to fight the open enemy without being called upon to fight an internal enemy which is fighting effectively in some ways against recruiting, the prime need of the hour.

This internal enemy is insignificant as a body, but it is having an effect in preventing recruiting, and should be cast out body and spirit. There should be no compromise with disloyalty at home.

Quebec has recruited 13,800 soldiers since the war began, whereas, she should have enlisted 75,000 in proportion to what Alberta has done. Ontario has recruited 36,300, whereas, if she had done as well as Alberta has done, the number would be 95,600. We are trying, in Peterborough at least, to remove all hindrances to enlistment, and all hindrances should be removed in every province of the Dominion. Then Canada will measure up to her duty and more adequately do its bit.

THE GERMANY "BLOCKADE."

Last January Germany announced that she would blockade Great Britain, starve her into surrender, and thus bring the war to a speedy close. In the seven months that have elapsed since that time, Germany's blockade has been so ineffectual that England's imports have increased over the corresponding period in the previous year by 500 million dollars. Last month alone there was an increase of nearly over July, 1914, of 80 million dollars. Increases have been far given to the starvation was the aim of the German blockade. The figures supply the test as to the relative successes of the British and German navies.—Montreal Telegraph-Herald.

THOMAS MARK
GENERAL AGENT

HOW OLD LONDON LIONIZED VICTORIA CROSS O'LEARY---- HIS RECRUITING SPEECH

[illegible] reception of Sergeant Michael O'Leary, V.C., [illegible] Hyde Park on Saturday was a magnificent [illegible] demonstration in Hyde Park. Saturday was a magnificent [illegible] from every point of view.

[illegible] marked that London decided the gathering in the park, to be typical of the love of Empire, as T. P. O'Connor, M.P., glancing over the enthusiastic crowd, declared with [illegible] pride that "the empire could look for its great generals, has never produced a more welcome one than Sergt. O'Leary."

[illegible] which will go down in the history of the Victoria Cross as the occasion when Sergt. O'Leary—and the best man out—disposed of 10 Germans. That means that 10 Irishmen can dispose of 100 Germans, and 100 Irishmen can dispose of 1,000 Germans.

"And as we have 250,000 Irishmen at the front, I think we had better call all the other troops away and leave the Irishmen to settle the business."

At the close of his remarks Mr. O'Connor presented the sergeant with a cheque and a little Belgian girl an address.

Cead Mille Failte.

Sergeant Beach then moved and Mr. Lansbury seconded a resolution in each of the platforms the following resolution:

"That this great demonstration of the Irishmen and Irishwomen of London [illegible] with a Cead Mile Failte to our gallant fellow-countryman, Sergt. Michael O'Leary, V.C., who has added a new page to the history of bravery of the British soldier, and offers him their heartiest congratulations on attaining the highest honour it is possible for a British soldier to receive, that they welcome him the more warmly because he fought as an Irishman side by side of the allies in their great struggle for the liberty of the world, and that they express the fervent hope that his countrymen who have not yet joined and who are at liberty to do so will be stirred by his glorious example to join our armies at the front."

Sergt. O'Leary, cool and nervous, was then called upon to speak.

What the Hero Said.

His remarks were few, but they were to the point. He said:

"This is more than I expected, even from the people of London." "We are Irish people," the so-called "and the crowd in the neighbourhood of the Ancre loved loudly."

"The reason I received the V.C. I have done nothing more than other men in the trenches have done, and I don't like it too. I don't like being made a fuss of either. I have only done my duty as a soldier and a man.

"There are quite as many good fellows as myself who have fought and are fighting. I happen to be one of the lucky ones. I am proud to fight for my King and country. All I say to fellows is to come along. Don't stand looking at me and cheering me. That's no good. Come and join me. We want more men, so make up your minds to join. That is the only way to beat the German hordes."

IRELAND AND THE WAR.

"There is no principle which Irishmen have ever fought for which the Allies are not fighting for to-day. They are fighting for a recognition of the principle of Nationality, for which we Irishmen have fought for six hundred years. They are fighting especially for a small nation. They are fighting for democracy and the Irish people are democrats. They are fighting for Liberty, for which Liberty tens of thousands of our people have lived and died." The case could not have been more pithily and more comprehensively stated. The essence of this war is the vindication of Nationality.—Dublin Freeman's Journal.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements —a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

Culverts For Euclid Ave. and Douro St.

Passed at Meeting of the Board of Works Last Night

At the Board of Works meeting last night it was decided to build an 8×0 culvert on the south side of Douro Street, across Conroy Street. It was recommended on motion of Ald Saunders, seconded by Ald. Evans. The present old culvert has seen much service and needs replacing.

On Euclid Avenue a concrete culvert 30 feet by 5 feet by 4 feet, at an estimated cost of $231, will be built, when a spell of dry weather sets in. At present there is considerable water flowing through the old culvert as the result of the recent storms. A walk on this street will also be built on the north side and east of Erskine Street. Both items were included in a motion by Ald. Weir, seconded by Ald. Evans.

Mayor Ballier remarked that East City was getting a large share for one night.

Ald Duffus moved, seconded by Ald Evans, that the question of a location for the Warren Paving Company's plant be left with the Mayor, Chairman Green and Mr. Parsons, who proposed location are in the C P R freight yards or on a C P R siding at the end of Sherbrooke Street.

Barriefield News

BARRIEFIELD, Aug 13. The band of the 59th battalion was started yesterday. In one week it is expected that that the organization will be complete and ready for its instrument, which will be bought out of the fund of $500 subscribed by the officers of the 14th regiment some time ago. A bandmaster from Peterborough has offered his services, with 16 good players as a nucleus for the band. There are several men in the city waiting for the band to start, especially among the men of the 14th, who are good band-men.

The appearance of the men and horses of the 8th C M R as they made their way through the city towards Belleville, has drawn many complimentary remarks from citizens. As they left camp yesterday morning they looked equal to any battalion in Canada and the Empire now mobilizing on Salisbury Plain.

Maj Medd is in command of the 8th C M R in the absence of Lieut-Col Munro. There are about 400 men of the regiment left in camp.

Electric light from the city plant is being carried into the office of the administration building. This will prove a very desirable addition to the camp, and may lead to the main roads of the camp being lighted up in the same manner.

The first batch of men for the three new field batteries that will come into camp at Barriefield were marched into camp yesterday morning by Major Sears, O C of the 33rd overseas depot draft battery. It was not a large force, just 26, but it means much to the camp, and when all are in will make quite an addition to the camp population. Tents were at once erected near the Standard office, and the men started to live under canvas. The men belong to the 33rd battery and have been recruited in the city of Kingston since Monday evening. Two recruiting stations have been opened in the city, one in artillery park in charge of Major Barrett, O C the 5th field battery of Kingston, and the other in the old Hub building on Market street, in charge of Major Sears. Other recruiting officers are out through the country between Brockville and Belleville, including Ottawa, after men for the 32nd and 34th batteries, and as soon as these are recruited they will be brought into camp at Barriefield. The good work of recruiting is progressing well, and the officers are satisfied that the publicity given to their work by the press is a big factor in securing recruits.

All over the division there is much interest in the welfare of the 59th battalion, and a number of centres are already active in undertaking to purchase something of use to the battalion. Many comforts are in particular have been promised, and this weapon seems to be the chief desire of most of the people who are anxious to assist the Kingston battalion. The commanding officer and his staff know the requirements of their battalion, and while they appreciate every contribution, whether it be a machine gun or a field kitchen, they could be better helped by donations of money, allowing them to purchase in the names of the contributors such things as the battalion may need. This would prevent overlapping in donations, and would also save the battalion from having too many guns or too much of any other requisite, above that supplied by the militia authorities. Three more field kitchens are needed for the 59th, and a great many other things, the need of which never occur to one outside of the inner workings of a battalion organized on active service lines, and if all the forces now organized to augment the funds of the 59th battalion will make donations of money instead of making the purchases themselves, they may trust to the good judgment of Lt.-Col Dawson and his staff to spend it in the best interest of the battalion, and in a way most helpful to its work.

THERE is one stronghold in every community that the mail order house has not been able to reach. This is the home town NEWSPAPER. In the face of all kinds of bribery the Home Newspaper has stood its ground for forty years and steadily refused the advertising patronage of the mail order houses. Right now MILLIONS are being spent by the "catalog kings" in a CONTINUOUS attempt to secure as an ALLY the Home Town Newspaper. But the country Editor is standing SOLID by his Home Community. He refuses to "SELL OUT" to the enemy. He turns DOWN all kinds of inducements. Let US think of this the next time WE are tempted to dicker with the enemy of our Home Town. Let US take the stand by our newspaper. Let us REFUSE to be bribed by a seeming bargain.

ESTIMATED YIELD OF FIELD CROPS

As Prepared by the Department of Agriculture—Crops Show an Excellent Average.

OTTAWA, August 14 The Census and Statistics Office issued today a bulletin giving a preliminary estimate of the yield of fall wheat, of hay and clover and of alfalfa based upon appearances at the end of July as estimated by correspondents, and a report on the condition of other field crops at the same date.

Fall Wheat, Hay and Clover and Alfalfa.

The preliminary estimate of the average yield per acre of fall wheat in Canada for 1915 is 23.10 bushels, as compared with 21.11 bushels last year and with 21.78 bushels, the average of the five years 1910 to 1914. The harvest in fall wheat in the five provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia amounts to 9[illegible] 1,3[illegible],700 acres, as compared with [illegible] acres in 1914, and the total estimated yield is 31,957,300 bushels, as compared with 29,847,000 bushels in 1914, an increase in total yield of 6[illegible] p.c. In 3 principal provinces harvested, the average yield per acre and the total yield of fall wheat harvest of 1915 is the highest expected by the latest record. In Ontario [illegible],000 bushels from 972,000 acres, an average of 27.06 bushels per acre and in Alberta the other large fall wheat province, the total yield is 6,225,000 bushels from 215,700 acres, an average of 28.86 bushels per acre. The estimated yield of hay and clover in 1915 is 10,350,000 tons from 7,[illegible],000 acres as compared with 9,[illegible],000 tons from 7,907,000 acres in 1914, the average yield per acre being 1.[illegible] tons, as compared with 1.15 ton in 1914. Alfalfa shows a total yield of 2,[illegible],750 tons from 92,[illegible] acres, as compared with 125,750 tons from 90,185 acres in 1914, the average yield per acre is 1.71 tons as compared with 1.44 ton.

Condition of Spring-Sown Crops.

Springs wheat crops continue to show an excellent average condition all being for Canada above 90 p.c. of the standard representing a full crop. Beans, buckwheat and flax are 88 p.c. of the standard, potatoes and turnips are above 90 and the remaining crops are as follow: Corn 82, mangolds 89, hay and clover 91, alfalfa 87, sugar beet 89 and pasture 89. Converted into a standard wherein 100 represents the average yield per acre of the seven years 1908 to 1914, the condition of the principal grain crops at July 31, 1915, is as follows: Fall wheat 129, spring wheat 112, all wheat 115, rye and barley 111, oats 108, flax 107. That is to say the yields per acre of the several crops according to their appearance on July 31, are expected to be above the average yields of the previous seven years to the extent of 29 p.c. per fall wheat, 12 p.c. for spring wheat, 15 p.c. for all wheat, 11 p.c. for rye and barley, 8 p.c. for oats and 7 p.c. for flax.

RECRUITS TO ATTEND ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH

The new recruits will attend divine service on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at St. George's Church. This trip combines a fairly long march, with the attendance at Church. The men will parade at the Armouries at 10:30 o'clock.

After a year's preparation the Militia Department has failed to provide enough uniforms for the new recruits. There should at least be uniforms in the local armouries for the new men taken on here. Just what the 59th men will wear to Church Sunday morning remains to be seen.

In spite of their boots of civilian dress the men have a smart appearance in their drills and marches. But they would be greatly improved with an adequate and complete equipment.

The infantry corps actually got over more than the first crowd of where. Some men taken on this more and should increase the strength over fifty-five.

DEATH OF WELL KNOWN PRELATE

Vicar-General of the Toronto Diocese Passed Away Last Evening

TORONTO, Aug 14 Monsignor Joseph J. McCann, Vicar-General of Toronto Diocese, passed away in this city last evening. The venerable prelate had attained his 81st year. He had been ailing for some months and took to his bed about three weeks ago.

Of Irish Parentage.

John McCann, the late Vicar-General's father, was a native of Dublin, Ireland, and came to Canada in 1834, settling in the township of Brock. Monsignor McCann was born at Port Hope, May 6, 1834. He was educated at St. Michael's College, Toronto, and the Grand Seminary, Montreal. Ordained in 1867, he was successively pastor at St. Catharines; Gore Parish, county Peel; St. Paul's Church, Toronto; Whitby and Ottawa. He was twice rector, of St. Michael's Cathedral, and served as Chairman of the Separate School Board of Toronto and President of the House of Industry.

His Work in Toronto.

He was appointed Dean of Toronto in 1889 and created a Roman Prelate, with the title of Monsignor, in 1909. Since 1914 he had been administrator of the Archdiocese of Toronto. He was also a member of the International Truth Society.

The body of Monsignor McCann will lie in state in St. Mary's Church, Bathurst street, from 1:30 p.m. Sunday, till Monday at 10 o'clock a.m. It will then be taken to St. Michael's Cathedral, where his Grace Archbishop McNeil will sing the Requiem Mass.

STRUCK BY STREET CAR AT LONDON ST. CROSSING

A George street car struck Miss Poole, who resides at 52 Crescent street, last night at the corner of London street. It was stated that she had hailed the car, but was standing on the wrong side of the pay-as-you-enter vestibule and tried to cross the track. The car had slackened speed and was travelling only moderately fast. It struck her a glancing blow and she was reported to have received a severe shaking up. She was able to board the car and proceed south.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

An invading army may be excused for shooting at sight a civilian caught red-handed, or against whom there is proof positive on enquiry. But this was not the practice followed by the German troops. They do not seem to have made any enquiry. They seized the civilians of the invaded districts at random, and shot them without the least regard to [illegible] The mere cry [illegible] was enough to hand over a whole village to destruction, and even children [illegible] to a firing squadron.

We gladly record the instances where the evidence shows that humanity had not wholly disappeared from some members of the German army, and that they realized the [illegible] roads of war [illegible] both were engaged in [illegible] war, but [illegible] executing [illegible] and I should [illegible] I did not execute them," said an officer to a witness at Louvain. "At Brussels another officer said: 'I have got at the one-hundredth part of what we were ordered to do by the higher German military authorities.' We have already observed, it would be unjust to claim, when the German army generally acts of cruelty which, whether due to drunkenness or not, were done by men of brutal instincts and unbridled passions. Such crimes were sometimes witnessed by officers. They were in some cases offset by acts of humanity not kindliness. But when an army is directed or permitted to kill noncombatants on a large scale, the ferocity of the worst natures springs into fuller life, and both lust and thirst of blood become more widespread and more formidable. Had less license been allowed the soldier, and had they not been set to slaughter the civilians, there would have been fewer of those painful cases in which a depraved and morbid cruelty appears. Two classes of murders in particular require special mention, because one of them is almost new, and the other altogether unprecedented. The former is the seizure of peaceful citizens as so-called hostages to be kept as a pledge for the conduct of the civil population, or as a means to secure some military advantage, or to compel the payment of a contribution, the hostages being shot if the condition imposed by the arbitrary will of the invader is not fulfilled. Such hostage taking, with the penalty of death attached, has now and then happened, the most notable case being the shooting of the Archbishop of Paris and some of his clergy by the Communards of Paris, in 1871, but it is opposed both to the rulers of war and to every principle of justice and humanity. The latter kind of murder is the killing of innocent inhabitants of a village because shots have been fired, or are alleged to have been fired, on the troops by someone in the village. For this practice no previous example and no justification have been or can be pleaded. Soldiers suppressing an insurrection may have sometimes slain civilians mingled with the insurgents, and Napoleon's forces in Spain are said to have now and then killed promiscuously when trying to clear guerillas out of a village. But in Belgium large bodies of men, sometimes including the burgomaster and the priest, were seized, marched off by officers to a spot chosen for the purpose, and there shot in cold blood without any attempt at trial or even an enquiry, under the pretence of inflicting punishment upon the village though these unhappy victims were not even charged with having themselves committed any wrongful act, and though, in some cases at least, the village authorities had done all in their power to prevent any molestation of the invading force. Such acts are to part of war, for innocents are killed to-day even in war. They are mere murders, just as the drowning of the passengers and crews on a merchant ship is murder and not an act of war.

That these acts should have been perpetrated on the peaceful population of an unoffending country which was not at war with its invaders, but merely regarded its own neutrality, entailed on the invading power [illegible] It was with amazement and horror [illegible] that the Commission first read the depositions to [illegible] But when the evidence became [illegible] we were driven to the conclusion that the [illegible] Not from the [illegible]

Soldiering Is A Man's Game

Writes Pte. Duggan of the Peterborough Detachment, First Canadian Contingent.

Mr. Charles Duggan, of this city, has received a letter from Pte. Patrick Duggan, of the Peterborough detachment, First Canadian Expeditionary Force, now in France and Belgium. The writer has the following to say in part:

"We are having quite a long spell in the trenches this time. We spend four days in the trenches and four days in reserve. This time we have been in the trenches fourteen or fifteen days, and have had some very severe weather to contend with. For two or three days we have had nothing but rain and pretty cold rain at that. I got wet through twice and had my greatcoat on too. The last time I got wet was the worst because I couldn't move about. It was while I was on listening patrol between the German lines and our own that it rained the worst. Another fellow and I had to lay there all the time. I don't know whether the Huns got wise to our position or not, but they kept shooting star lights over our way every few minutes. One dropped on the heel of my boot. The fellow with me had no greatcoat on, and he was like a wet sack. The rain was running down his legs into his boots. Soldiering is a man's work all right."

Zeppelin Raid on English Factory Town Described to Germans

The Cologne Gazette gives the following description of a Zeppelin raid on England. "Lieutenant-Commander X., in command of L——, enters the airship shed. The crew of two deck officers and twelve non-commissioned officers is already at work. One of the officers satisfies himself that the supply of petrol is complete, while the other superintends the carriage of bombs and incendiary missiles into the gondolas. At starting the water ballast is discharged. The vessel gradually rises above her props and floats in the air.

"The captain paces her whole length, scanning her with careful eye. Then he climbs into the front gondola and orders her to be taken out. The lieutenant repeats the order, "Airship forward," and the men with the mooring ropes tow her into the open. She is now held only by the gondolas, into which the lieutenant now climbs. The last ropes are dropped, and almost simultaneously the engine-room telegraph signals "Motors full speed ahead." With a noise like thunder the propellers spring into life, the vessel shoots forward, and up.

The forward gondola resembles the bridge of a warship, and the skipper bends over his maps. The vessel advances in a straight line to the north-west. A number of fishing vessels can be seen at sea, all flying the Dutch flag. By 3 p.m. the skipper's mission is at an end. He had received orders to be back at the hangar before dusk, but the weather being so favorable he telegraphically asks permission to act on his own initiative and profit by the favorable opportunity. "Agreed," is the reply.

Continuing his flight to the north-west he determines to deliver a blow against the English coast. It is yet twilight when he approaches England and ascends to a height of 5,500 feet in order to keep out of sight of the watchful eyes on board England's guardships. Through a rift in the clouds a destroyer can be seen making the round of guardships. There is nothing yet to be seen of the land, but a blackish mistiness on the distant horizon is recognized by the trained eye as smoke from the chimneys of an industrial district.

It is dark. . . . keeping on to the coast, he descends, awaiting daylight the two moles marking the mouth of the river which he is seeking. Almost simultaneously some flashes of artillery fire from a fortress below. The airships glow, lighting on his face by the signals, apparatus and fires. The windows of workshops suddenly become dark. The men in the gondolas are under the impression that they see policemen hurrying through the streets with cries of warning, because house after house is suddenly swallowed in darkness, until the town and suburbs are in complete obscurity.

HARVESTING ON SUNDAY

How an Otonabee Farmer Sat on the Verandah and Waited for Monday, While the Fields Were Pregnant With the Harvest

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—In view of what has occurred with respect to the serious loss of $20,000,000, owing to rain, the suggestion that Sunday work may be necessary should a favorable day come along for carrying grain, brings to my recollection a talk with a farmer near the Otonabee. While sitting in the shade during the very hot afternoon of July 3rd, I asked the farmer why he was not getting in his grain, as he had some remarkably good fall wheat ready to pick up, and instanced that during a wet season in the north of England, I had seen clergy and people, after early morning service, troop into the fields, and work as long as they could see. Roman Catholic and Protestant equally busy. My farmer friend smiled a sad smile and remarked that it would not do in this country.

What has happened since? The following day grain carrying began, at noon it rained slightly, but only for an hour, not causing much delay. Since then it has rained nearly every day, and the fall wheat has been in hundreds of farms utterly ruined owing to sprouting, which I have seen personally.

Had the hot day of August 1st been used for storing all fall wheat only, ready for carrying, the $20,000,000 loss would have been cut in half at least. In view of the tremendous importance of a bountiful harvest not only in Canada but to the Empire at large, it is a matter for sincere regret that such a splendid opportunity as that of August 1st was lost. I am no advocate for a seven-day working week, but it is on record that wheat has been plucked on the Sabbath, also that King David actually ate of the Shew bread, an act of sacrilege because of the necessity. It seems to me that in face of the unprecedented circumstances in which we are not only there is a good excuse for work on such a vast quantity of food.

Yours truly,
Observer.

ADVICE TO FATHER

The Yale freshman to whom was given very expensive to father, so father decided to have a heart to heart talk with Elmer, home for the week end.

Now, my son," said the gravely, our affairs mostly your mother and I are spending just as little as we possibly can. I get up in the morning at half past six and I work until one. But you, Elmer, you don't work. You're going at the rate that your expenses are running. Now I ask you, as one man to another, what do you think we had better do?

For a moment Elmer's head was buried in thought and then he replied:

Now, I don't know exactly what's best for you to do in this matter

To Banish Wrinkles and Freshen Up Quickly

After a strenuous day outdoors, when sport, heat and exhaustion have combined to take away one's freshness and cause the skin to wrinkle and sag, or after a sedentary, stuffy day indoors, one often has urgent need for some quick rejuvenator. Maybe there's a dance on for the evening, or some other social event. Now in the world can one make herself presentable looking as she does. It's quite easy.

Just get an ounce of powdered saxolite and a half pint witch hazel at the nearest drug store, mix the two and bathe the face in the solution for two or three minutes. Then look into your mirror and behold the wonderful transformation! Wrinkles have vanished, loose, tired muscles have been rested and firmed up, marks of fatigue have flown, and you look as much brighter and younger you can hardly believe your eyes. No one need know you've been up all night, and to state being so perfectly harmless

Father Stanton's Resignation Will Have to be Accepted

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—Friends and admirers of the Rev. Father Stanton, O.M.I., well known throughout the Dominion as one of the best football coaches in the Canadian game besides being a competent hockey, baseball and track and field mentor, will be pleased to hear that he has recovered some what from his recent illness and is now resting at his home in Brooklyn. He is suffering from a severe attack of kidney trouble and although an operation has been deferred he will ultimately have to submit to one. His specialist, according to information that has reached the city, has ordered a complete rest for the eminent coach.

A rest means that his resignation now in the hands of the authorities of the University must necessarily be accepted and with it comes a loss to the institution of its greatest coach and athletic adviser. Ottawa College and the name of Father Stanton are synonymous. He is known throughout the length and breadth of Canada and in those cities of the States where ice hockey is now the popular winter sport.

As a football expert the reverend priest first gained fame when he won the Canadian intercollegiate title with his great football machine in 1907. That team practically revolutionized Canadian football for its play was mostly the American style adapted to the Canadian rules.

He has been the best developer of amateur baseball talent that the capital has ever had. It seems that all he had to do to make a player or any student he selected was to simply put a uniform on the youngster and tell him he was a pitcher or a shortstop or a real slugging outfielder.

His absence from Ottawa when the football season returns next autumn will be felt. Without doubt he really is forced to remain away from the college on account of his health. Football won't be the same. Father Stanton underwent a severe operation a couple of years ago for appendicitis and since then his health has never been the best. His friends hope, however, that he will be able to return to the city and continue in his chosen work.

FOUR SONS AT WAR.

Welland Woman Has That Proud Distinction.

Welland, Ont., Aug. 14.—One Welland woman at least has four sons fighting for the British Empire, when Gunson Ernest joined the 44th regiment's quota of the fourth Canadian overseas contingent. One son, G. H. Dove, is with the Second West Yorkshire regiment and has been at the front since the early part of the war. He has been awarded the distinguished service medal for brave conduct. The next son, Trooper F. Dove, is with the Queen's Bays, a well known British regiment. They are both unmarried. The third son, Arthur Dove, is a member of the 76th overseas battalion of the Canadian forces, while as stated previously, the last son has just joined. The mother resides in Welland and she has one son-in-law [illegible] and a 12-year-old daughter.

Had "Cholera Infantum."

WAS WASTED TO A SHADOW.

Cholera Infantum is one of the most common summer complaints of infants, and many die who could be saved if taken in hand on the first sign of the trouble. It begins with a pain or diarrhoea, very often accompanied by vomiting, and the matter ejected from the stomach has a bilious appearance. The child rapidly loses flesh and becomes weak and languid.

Mrs. W. Ellis, 455 Jones Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my three boys, and I do believe it saved their lives. One of them had cholera infantum so bad he was wasted to a shadow, and the doctor had given him up, but 'Dr. Fowler's' cured him. I have also used it myself for colds, and find it an excellent remedy. I would not be with out it in the house."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the original remedy for the cure of all bowel complaint. It has been on the market for the past 70 years.

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" see that you get "Dr. Fowler's."

Death of Former Peterboro' Man

The Late Thomas Sherlock Was Born in Peterboro' Forty-six Years Ago—The Funeral

The following, taken from The Escanaba (Mich.) Morning Mail, has a local connection, the late Mr. Thomas Sherlock being a brother of Miss Margaret Sherlock, Neill Street, and of Mr. Edward Sherlock, City [illegible]

The funeral arrangements of Mr. Thomas Sherlock, who for fifteen years past has been manager of the Delta Coal Dock Company's ore docks, were completed yesterday afternoon, and the remains of the deceased were laid to rest in Oakwood cemetery Saturday morning, 7th August.

The funeral was held from the late home of the deceased and touched the hearts of those who had been touched, through the infirmities of the flesh, to remain in his bed for many months, just as the dawn was breaking in the east. Peaceful, and with [illegible] appearance of the life he had lived, Thomas Sherlock passed over into the Great Beyond.

Mr. Sherlock was taken ill with an affection of the heart several months ago. He was forced to his bed at that time, but later improved so nicely that he was enabled to get outside. However, a relapse followed and he was again taken in his former condition. Gradually he lost in the fight against disease, until his vitality and powers of resistance were greatly lowered. He lay calmed and seemed to be on the up-grade several times during the past few weeks, but lack of strength finally enabled him to shuffle off this mortal coil."

A wife, one son, Charles, and a daughter Lillian, survive the passing of husband and father, besides three sisters residing in Canadian cities, and two brothers. Mr. Sherlock was an active worker in the First Baptist Church up to the time of his illness, and his cheerful and sunny presence will be keenly missed there.

Miss Margaret Sherlock, Peterborough, Ont., Mrs. W. J. Thompson, Toronto, and Mrs. W. B. Tapson, of Bowmanville, are the sisters; Robt. Sherlock of Tofield, Alta., and Francis Sherlock, also of Peterborough, the brothers.

Coming to this city from Chicago fifteen years ago, Mr. Sherlock was placed in charge of the Deiss Coal Company's dock here, which position he has held ever since. He has been an employer of labour, and his methods with his men were of a character that brought them closer to him [illegible] He was known as a man who always had a cheery smile and bright and sunny greeting for everyone. He was fond of a good joke and loved to tell one. His disposition won for him a great number of friends.

He was born in Peterborough, Ont., Canada, 46 years ago. He left the employ, on the office staff, of the G.T.R. in his native city, going from there to Belleville, and while still a young man he went to Chicago, and from there to Escanaba.

The Funeral.

One of the most impressive Masonic funerals ever held in Escanaba was that of the late Thomas Sherlock, held on the afternoon of Monday, 9th August, from the home of the family at 713 Delta Avenue.

The home of the bereaved family was filled with friends who had come to pay their last respects to the departed one.

Outside the home the lawn was crowded with members of the Escanaba Masonic fraternity, Knights of Pythias and of the Sons of Veterans, societies of which Mr. Sherlock was a member, as well as coal dock employees.

At the home, Rev. Guy V. Hoard was in charge of the services, and several numbers were sung by a quartette. The casket, as it lay in the room, was buried beneath a load of wreaths and ferns. The room was literally filled with the beautiful floral offerings, a great mass of floral tributes having been received at the home from the many friends of the deceased.

As the funeral cortege left the home the fraternal members formed in line, and when well under way stretched for nearly half a mile, there being nearly three hundred men walking two abreast.

The very impressive services of the Masonic order, of which the deceased was Worshipful Past Master and Past Master for a number of years, were read at the grave, where the casket lay shrouded in a great bank of flowers.

OBSTINATE INDIGESTION CAN BE CURED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Go Right to the Root of the Trouble

No trouble causes more widespread suffering and discomfort than indigestion. The ailment takes various forms. Some victims are ravenous for food, others turn sick at the sight of meals; but as a rule every meal is followed by intense pains in the chest, heartburn, sick headache and often nauseau. Indigestion assumes an obstinate form because ordinary medicines only subdue its symptoms but do not cure. So-called pre-digested foods only make the digestion more sluggish, and ultimately make the trouble take a chronic form.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure indigestion because they go right to the root of the trouble. They make new, rich blood, which so strengthens the system that the stomach does its own work and digests the food in a natural way. Many a terrible sufferer from indigestion has found a permanent cure through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Among them is Mrs. H. Carmen, Locke Street, north, Hamilton, Ont., who says: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills not only gave me new health, but saved me [illegible] For five years I was a great sufferer, was almost constantly doctoring, and spent a great deal of money with absolutely no result. My stomach was in such a dreadful condition that frequently it would not retain nourishment of any kind. When I ate I suffered terrible pains, a fluttering of the heart and often a feeling of nausea. In addition to this I was in a very anaemic condition, and felt as if I was lingering between life and death. One day while sitting in the park a lady got into conversation with me, and I told her my trouble. She asked me if I had tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, saying that they had been a great benefit to her daughter. When I went home I decided to try this medicine. I soon found the pills were helping me, and continued taking them for seven months, when I was restored to better health than I had enjoyed for years, and I have since been the picture of health. I hope my experience may be the means of pointing to others the way to health."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Liberal Leader Urges Legislation Permitting People to Vote at Next Municipal Election---Strong Temperance Sentiment in West---Would Give the People of Ontario a Chance to Close the Bars

Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., leader of the Liberal Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, is home after an extended tour of the west. He has had exceptional opportunities to study the development of public sentiment against the open bar throughout the progressive Prairie Provinces and in British Columbia, and spoke enthusiastically concerning it in an interview.

Mr. Rowell puts a new and democratic proposal to the Ontario Government. He pledges his co-operation in a project which will enable the citizens of Ontario to decide the question of bar abolition for themselves at the next municipal voting in January.

Dealing with the whole question, Mr. Rowell said:

"The spirit of interest and concern which the people of western Canada are manifesting in the war is being manifested also in a scarcely less marked degree in efforts to curtail the evils of the liquor traffic. They believe that the continued existence of the open bar is impairing both the offensive and defensive power of the nation, and is a serious social and economic burden which they cannot afford to carry during the serious days which lie before us.

Situation in Saskatchewan.

"I had the privilege of being in Saskatchewan when the new legislation came into force, abolishing all the bars of the Province, and of attending the banquet given in honour of the Premier, Hon. Walter Scott, commemorating the passing of this important legislation. I found leading men of the Province, both Liberal and Conservative, as well as the newspapers of the Province, united in approving of the wiping out of the bars in Saskatchewan. While there might be differences as to the details of the legislation, the approval of the principle appeared to be general.

Proposal to Ontario Government.

"It is now clearly up to the Government of this Province, if they will to close all drinking-places by direct legislative act, as the Government of Saskatchewan has done, at least to give the people an opportunity to close them themselves, as the Government of Alberta has already done and the Government of Manitoba is about to do. In answer to questions as to whether a vote might be taken in Ontario at the next municipal election Mr. Rowell said it could be done by calling a session of the House in November. The Government could pass the necessary legislation so as to permit the vote being taken at the ensuing municipal elections, as it is understood will be done in Manitoba. The House could then adjourn and resume the normal work of the session in the new year. This is one of the real contributions which the Government and the people of Ontario can make towards aiding the cause of Great Britain and her allies, and of preparing the way for the better adjustment of settlement of the grave social and economic problems which will undoubtedly follow the close of the war. If the Government will deal with the question either by direct legislative act or by submitting the question to a majority vote of the people they will have my cordial support."

STIRRING ADDRESSES ON BEHALF OF RECRUITING IN VICTORIA PARK LAST NIGHT

The big crowd that gathered in Victoria Park last night for the weekly band concert heard some splendid addresses on behalf of recruiting in this city. Stirring appeals for recruits were made by Police Magistrate Dumble, Mr. E. J. Soden and Rev. Jas. Rollins. In the course of his remarks Mr. Dumble urged the young men of Peterborough to realize their duty in the present crisis. They had enjoyed the freedom, liberty, and all the privileges of a great Empire. Now it was their duty to rally to its protection and fight until the invading "Huns" were subdued for all time to come. The Spartan mothers gave their sons a sword going into battle, admonishing them to return it with honour or perish in their cause. None the less patriotic are the British mothers who are giving their sons in the defence of the Empire in which they have enjoyed for years, liberty, peace and prosperity.

Mr. E. J. Soden made a strong appeal to the patriotism of the men present. In emphatic tones he asked "Where is our duty to-day? Is it here or over there in the trenches of France?" The Empire, he said, was in peril, and the ties that should keep men at home now must be very strong. Everyone must be ready to make sacrifices, at this time, and to meet the call of duty.

In a most forcible and straightforward address Rev. Jas. Rollins left no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to what should be their duty at the present time. He delivered a message not only to the men of Peterborough, but also to the mothers and young women of the city. "Who was to protect the fair Dominion from the ruthless and inhuman attacks of the enemy," he asked. Canada was as much in danger as any part of the Empire, and it was to the young men of the country that the duty devolved upon, to protect and defend her. The answer to the question, "Why don't you enlist?" is very often "My wife won't let me," or "My mother doesn't want me to go." "I have as little sympathy for the man who hides behind his wife's refusal as for the one who gives as his excuse, 'his mother won't let him,'" said the speaker.

"The women are doing great work in this noble cause, but it is time they realized that something else was required besides knitting socks for other mothers' sons but their own. The young women could do much in influencing their sweethearts as to their duty."

Continuing, Rev. Mr. Rollins stated that there were in Canada, numbers of men who had been receiving military training for years, but who had not answered the call. They have received training at the expense of the Government in order that they might be ready in a crisis like the present. "Then in heaven's name what was this training for," asked Mr. Rollins. "If not to be ready to fight when the call came."

"The call was a clear one and all must be ready, no matter what the sacrifice to do their duty."

The programme by the band was of a patriotic nature.

MEEEING OF THE FAIR DIRECTORS

Was Held Last Evening—Will Hold One Evening Performance Only—An Added Attraction.

The directors of the Industrial Exhibition Board met last evening and among other things decided upon are evening performances only. The balance of the judges was selected and other arrangements complete. An endeavour will be made to have Mr. F. J. Dale's horse, "Yedno," give an exhibition on each day of the Fair, an arrangement which Mr. Daly will accede to if possible.

A committee was appointed to wait upon a committee of the Speakers' Patriotic League to confer with them regarding a speaker for the grounds during the Fair.

SURFACE DRAIN FOR DOURO ST. TOO HIGH

Would Cost Almost $10,000 on Account of Conflicting With Sewer

A contemplated surface drainage system for Douro Street was estimated by City Engineer Parsons to cost $9,495.00 on account of meeting interference that would arise with the sewer. Mel Green remarked at the Board of Work that it was not likely the work would be carried out this year.

"Nor any other," concluded Ald. Weir who will try to get all that's going for East End, but not a ten thousand dollar street drain for Douro Street.

Mr. Parsons explained that the present sewer is in the wrong place to permit the construction of a surface drain. In some places a depth of seventeen feet would have to be reached, thereby augmenting the cost of the system.

Mayor Butler "Is there any other place it might be put?"

Mr. Parsons "I can't see any."

Londoners Buy New Ball Ground

Expect Franchise in New League Next Year.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 13.—The seven acre piece of property in East London, one mile off the car line was bought today by a number of men interested in the promotion of a strong baseball league for next season, in which a franchise would be given to London.

The negotiations now under way will supplant the Canadian circuit with an organization which would be a farm for the Federal league. The outlaw organization finds that in order to have something to fall back upon they must have a league where players can be developed and placed when not quite of major league caliber.

The number of players developed in the Canadian league is what first drew the attention of the circuit as a most promising league to promote as a Federal league farm.

The fact that Toronto and Montreal franchises in the International league have dropped considerable money in the past makes the two big Canadian cities certain and grand propositions for the new organization, especially as Toronto has been considered a good place to own a franchise in the major circuit of the Federal league.

Even though the Federal league may be taken into the organized fold by next season the proposition which includes Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Rochester, London and Ottawa would be a means to forming a paying circuit and greatly to be preferred over the Canadian and International leagues as now composed.

The bonding of the property in London is one of the plans by which a franchise in the new circuit is assured.

BASEBALL

In the last few games Jennings has been given good pitching. Covaleskie has been stron, in almost all of his games on the road and Dubuc did great work in two starts at Philadelphia. The club will have to go along with its present pitching staff, it appears, because no one seems to be willing to sell Detroit a twirler.

The Bill Lamar deal is not off yet. But he has asked $10,000, and a couple of players. That, of course, is an absurd proposition. Still, the Detroit ownership is prepared to pay an unusual sum if it can get a pitcher or two to help it clinch the flag.

Right now the Tigers are in a bad batting slump. The big trio is doing almost nothing. In view of the lack of hitting by these players, and the poor pitching that the team has had, its present position is something to marvel over. If it should ever get consistent hitting and good day-after-day boxwork it would look like a pennant certainty.

There is no club in the country, so far as has been seen, that has anything on the Tiger except in pitching. The team can outhit and outrun any rival and has more pepper than any opponent that it meets. All that it needs is a little more strength on the hill.

Pitcher Ian McGinley, formerly of the Toronto Internationals, who was an applicant for the position of manager of the Hamilton club, has been signed by Manchester, of the New England league.

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 13.—Manager Bierbauer has released First Baseman Ort and has lines out to strengthen up his Saints for the remaining games of this season. Several more will be dropped shortly.

According to some of Johnny Evers' teammates he recently became convinced that he has tuberculosis and that he must retire and go west. He has been assured there is nothing the matter with his lungs, however, and this assurance doubtless has had something to do with his sudden determination not to retire just yet.

Says Puttee Will Remain

No Further Delay in Supplying Canadian Soldiers With Uniforms—Khaki Cloth Was Scarce.

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—Rumours that a change in the puttee is to remain. While changes are in contemplation for special classes of work, there is no intention on the part of the Militia Council generally to abandon the puttee and ankle boot.

Discussing the question Senator Lougheed, Acting Minister of Militia, said that it had been under consideration with the British War Office for some considerable time. The advantage of the long boot over the puttee and ankle boot had been strongly argued, and an exhaustive series of experiments had been made. These experiments had shown that while the long boot was preferable in certain cases like winter work in the trenches, the puttee was better, generally speaking.

It is not the case that the War Office decided to have the puttee superceded by the ankle boot," Senator Lougheed remarked. "A limited number of long boots are to be made, but the puttee will still remain. We are following the same course."

Uniforms Aplenty Now.

No further difficulty is anticipated in supplying recruits with uniforms. There has in the past been delay in certain districts where recruiting has been specially heavy. The difficulty was in the supply of khaki cloth. Under the arrangements made by the Department of Militia the Government purchased the cloth from cloth manufacturers direct, and supplied it to the uniform manufacturer. This ensured uniformity in colour and quality.

So heavy for a time was the demand for khaki cloth that the Canadian manufacturers were unable to cope with it. It is announced now that the cloth manufacturers have removed the necessary equipment and there is no delay in the supply of cloth.

Captive Balloon, Regarded Obsolete, Wins New Honours

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 12.—Much has been written about the new rôle of the aeroplane as an aviator and a correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt tells something of his experiences at the other "end of a leaf" the captive balloon. He was permitted to make an ascent in one of those [illegible] of the German lines in the vicinity of Arras and thus describes his experiences.

The captive balloon is playing an astonishing rôle in this war, the more so as nothing much was expected from it. It was used in manoeuvres for stabilling purposes only. Aviators and all the work. It was taken into this war as something antiquated, being regarded rather as an encumberance, but it has come to unexpected honour, thanks to the conditions of modern warfare. Captive balloons are to be seen all along the front, and their value is great. They take aloft whole batteries of photographic apparatus.

The aviator soaring through the air at a tremendous speed has not the leisure to make the observations possible to the man in the balloon. The balloon is stationary. It remains on the spot for hours, and even for days. Even if the observer suffers from mal de mer he remains aloft. He is the eye of the artillery. He watches every move of the opponent, the flashes of the guns and controls the fire of his own.

"But his perch is most dangerous. Shrapnel and shell search constantly [illegible] and elevator will [illegible] as a target frequently [illegible]. They rarely hurt the [illegible] and [illegible] has to be removed to a distance.

The whole panorama spread out before the observer is one of [illegible] attached, but to a living soul is to [illegible]. Man is living from [illegible] in holes in the ground and [illegible] with [illegible] to kill. In the middle of the picture lies the wide slope of the Lorette Hill, [illegible] crowned by the Forest of Bolsvaux. From the edge of the forest a broad, grayey scar stretches right across the height, like a gaping wound. It is made up trenches which the French shot to pieces on May [illegible].

"Further down the valley a narrower, newer seam is visible, our trenches. Today. On a wooded dome to the right of the Lorette a white mansion stands out clearly. It was the famous Castle of Nodlette, also in the hands of the French. The hill merges into the plain and Souchez comes into sight, obscured by a dense cloud of smoke and vapour.

"Near by is Albain, where our men fought like gray devils. Below us flash of light catch the eye. They are the flames from our guns. The vapours from the bursting shells on either side blot the scenery.

"After rising to a height of 500 feet the balloon was pulled down to permit the correspondent to alight, and a few minutes later it was continuing its ceaseless vigil aloft."

THE CALL TO ARMS

The following poem is from the pen of Rev. Alex. Ketterson, late of County Donegal, Ireland, who is now locum tenens at St. John's Church, Lakefield, in the absence of the rector, Rev. H. A. Ben Ohel, who has gone to the front:

"Hear the clarion call of duty,
Coming ringing o'er the sea.
'Tis the call of dear old Britain,
She is calling you and me.

Hear the tramp of Armed soldiers,
And the beating of the drum,
As our gallant boys they march away,
To fight the barborous Hun.

To fight and die in Freedom's Cause,
That British love so dear;
To face both shell and bayonet,
With hearts that know no fear.

They stand as heroes every man,
In the trenches wet and cold,
Yet still they fight and nobly die
Like warriors true and bold.

"Your King and country need you,"
And shall you a coward be?
Then join the ranks and forward march,
And cross the deep blue sea.

And stand beside those noble men,
Who too have heard the call,
And left their homes and loved ones dear,
To fight where brave men fall."

some times, he has had a somewhat difficult cabinet to manage, and politics have whitened the hair which I saw (it seems to me but yesterday) the shining fair hair of a stripling when he stood up to defend Parnell against the Pigott forgeries.

Irish Supported Premier.

I think the Irish Party was largely responsible for his holding on, as well, of course as his sense that the country demanded his presence at the head of affairs. On one of the fateful days when the whole fate of the Cabinet was trembling in the balance, the Irish Party held a meeting to decide on its policy. Without breaking the bond of secrecy which binds the inner councils of that Party, I may say that a feeling of great confidence and great affection for Mr. Asquith was the dominating note.

I saw Mr. Asquith this afternoon by chance and I felt I was entitled to report to him the feeling of my colleagues. He was deeply touched and I believe that the feeling of the Irish party gave him the final impetus to face intrigue and to retain his position.

Unionists Gave Them Aid.

In the meantime other events worked in Mr. Asquith's favour. The new Unionist members of the Cabinet rallied around him with extraordinary rapidity, considering what the relations between him and them had been. It is curious how this man always asserts his immense intellectual predominance wherever he comes into close contact with other men; and this is what happened in the Cabinet. I asked one of Mr. Asquith's colleagues and friend how the "P.M." as he is familiarly called, just as Mr. Gladstone was called "Mr. G." and Campbell Bannerman was known as "C.B." by his colleagues now, I say, the P.M. was faring. I should mention that this friend of the Prime Minister was one of those who had taken the most pessimistic view of the Coalition, and had prophesied that it would not last for more than a few months.

"Why," he replied, "it has done the P.M. all the good in the world; it has given him new life and renewed energy."

And then this gentleman, who has a gift of epigrammatic speech, said that while the Cabinet consisted of members only of the same political party and personal friends tied to each other by long acquaintance as well as by common political sympathies, Mr. Asquith was inclined to sit silently during most of the discussions. He was, said his friend, like the British paterfamilias at breakfast who sits behind the big teapot and listens silently to the chatter of her offspring with amused tolerance. But now, went on the friend, he watches everything; when anybody says something not very clever he gazes at him and the interrupter becomes silent, and when discussion—as is the case even in cabinets—becomes discursive the Prime Minister intervenes promptly and brings debate back to the real and inner issues, and thus guides and controls all these men of such strong characters mainly and of such intellectual distinction.

Thus, then, Mr. Asquith has only friends today in a Cabinet of which nearly half, a few months ago, were his strong political opponents. In the House of Commons he is unassailable and almost omnipotent. The few voices that tried to carry on the newspaper campaign against him were drowned in the universal howl of disapprobation which rose from all parts of the House whenever they even whispered any such purpose.

A Transformerd House.

The appearance of the House of Commons has thus been entirely transformed from anything anybody has ever seen there since the beginning of time. The intimacy of political has brought also the intimacy of social and private relations; and thus these men so estranged are become daily more friendly to each other. A Bonar Law, the old-time enemy, sits frequently at Mr. Asquith's side and they may be seen in constant consultation and in friendly converse. Some of the new ministers stand in isolation largely because they have such absorbing work in their offices. Lloyd George never appears; he is deep in munitions. Sir Edward Grey has made it a rule to be in the House of Commons as little as possible since he took up the foreign office; and Sir Edward Carson, although quite friendly even to Nationalist opponents, is a sombre man with uncertain health and uncertain spirits and rarely appears.

Mr. Balfour is too absorbed by the work of the navy to come to the House of Commons except when he has an important announcement to make. Thus it is that Mr. Asquith, who used to be something of an absentee, is now more frequently seen in the House than any of his colleagues, and this intimacy of touch which he keeps with the House in all of its constant variations of mood and conditions has helped to bring out that extraordinary ascendancy over all parties which is one of the curious and unexpected results of a political experiment that at one time seemed to presage his downfall.

Ashes Must Be Removed

The City Engineer has been instructed to take such action as may be necessary to compel Police Magistrate Dumble to remove a load of ashes that he is alleged to have placed in a ditch on Donegal Street some months ago. A resolution to this effect was passed at a meeting of the Board of Works that was held last evening. It was moved by Ald. Edgar and seconded by Ald. Saunders.

A CORRECTION.

Through a typographical error in connection with the report of yesterday's police court proceedings, the use of V. E. In justice to Mr. Graham it might be stated that his case consisted of a breach of the automobile act, and did not include any suggestion of drunkenness.

SOME WALKS WILL WAIT END OF WAR

Several, However, Receive Special Consideration and May be Laid

The policy of retrenchment in the Board of Works' affairs was well illustrated at last night's meeting when most of the sidewalks advertised to be constructed a year ago were passed up for this year. The motto for most of them was to let them wait until the war is over. In this list was Baker and Clara street, on the Baker property off Patterson street, three or four new streets on the Victoria Heights lots, Clifton street, north side Rogers to Concession, Douro street, south side, east of Rogers street, Gilchrist, east side, Landon to Dublin, Knox, Carlisle to Munro, Elias, west side.

Edmburgh, south side, Aylmer to G.T.R. Ex-Ald. Johnston has some property up in this neighbourhood, and that was probably the reason for the special attention.

King street on the north side, from Pearl west, seemed to Ald. Green worthy of immediate work.

Ald. Langford reminded the chairman of his expressed intention of doing no work that was not needed. Ald. Langford remarked that there were no horses facing King street on the north side; there were crossings at every needed point and hence there was no immediate necessity for this sidewalk.

Ald. Green replied that he wanted to be consistent. There had been complaints of the water remaining on the street along King street and a sidewalk would provide a curb and would relieve the condition.

It was moved by Mayor Butler and seconded by Ald. Duffus, that the north side of King be advertised for a walk as far as Elias Avenue. The Board will be in a position to lay one or more blocks as they see fit.

BRIDGENORTH MAN INVENTS A BULLET

Mr. N. G. Bell of Bridgenorth is the inventor of an expanding bullet which can be used by submarines, aeroplanes, as well as by land artillery. It was primarily designed to destroy wire entanglements. Mr. Bell has advised the authorities in Ottawa of his invention, and has received a favourable reply. He claims a bullet one foot in length will expand twenty one inches, and a bullet two feet in length will expand over four feet.

FOUR GUNS FOR THE 40TH REGIMENT

Col. Birdsall Has Secured Two—New York Financier Provides Another

COBOURG, Aug. 14.—Some time ago Lieut.-Col. Birdsall of Birdsall, Northumberland county, and Lieut.-Col. W. H. Fleyfel of Cobourg undertook to supply four machine guns, or pelaps for the boys of the 40th Northumberland Regiment who are at the front. It is understood that Lieut.-Col. Birdsall has secured two. Yesterday Lieut.-Col. Floyd received a letter from Mr. H. S. Black, a financier of New York city, enclosing a cheque for $1,000, to be forwarded to the Minister of Militia for the purchase of a machine gun for the 40th Regiment at the front. Mr. Black is a former Cobourg resident, a brother of Mrs. Harry Pringle. He has made large donations to the Cobourg Hospital and other civic enterprises.

A subscription has been started among Cobourg citizens for the purchase of a fourth gun.

Mr. J. T. C. Lang Was Elected Secretary

Of the Peterborough Poultry Association—An Interesting Paper.

At a meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association, Mr. J. T. C. Lang was appointed Secretary to succeed Mr. J. J. Cunningham, who is returning. It was the unanimous wish of the meeting that Mr. J. T. C. Lang act as secretary. Mr. Lang therefore had to resign the office of treasurer. Mr. Archie Brault, who was second vice-president, was appointed treasurer to fill Mr. Lang's office. Reuel over Mr. Cunningham's resignation was expressed.

The meeting was rather slimly attended, but an interesting and profitable time was spent. Mr. George McClelland gave a paper on poultry raising, dealing with the principal problems of the business. Mr. George Buller had on exhibition eight Rhode Island Reds and a thorough study of this breed of fowl and its characteristics was made.

Arrangements are being made to bring Prof. Graham of Guelph to the city and have him deliver an address at the next regular meeting.

Woman Lost Finger Tip

Mrs. M. E. McWilliams, Romaine Street, lost the tip of a finger yesterday afternoon. She was pulling in a log from the lake, according to the report. A boy named Girard had sunk an axe into the log, but as the hold loosened Mrs. McWilliams grabbed it. The axe "rose" itself and the boy struck the log a fresh blow and unfortunately struck her finger, severing part of it.

HIS MAJESTY'S MAIL TAKES A TUMBLE.

As an up-to-date man, P. E. Scollard, the mail contractor for the Peterborough-Lakehurst route, he has a Ford car on the run from Lansmere to Lakehurst. Coming down from the latter place on Monday morning and at the top of the hill leading to the Narrows, the brakes refused to work. There was nothing to it but to hang on and Stan Sullivan, the driver, hung on and kept the car on the road, but at the foot of the hill the Oak Orchard truck was waiting for the stage.

The truck's three occupants left at the car sustained a spoken to chatter and a few minutes later the horse and truck were travelling 15 feet off the road and the balance of the route was completed in a series of bumps.

It is presumed everybody would have happened at the car had not struck the truck it would immediately have swerved off the road but the ditch and turned over.

Mr. Hunt, a passenger, received injuries to his hands and face, but otherwise outside of a wrecked horse and a broken truck and car, no serious injuries were sustained.

As last reports the car was seen being towed to Peterborough for a new front.—Bobcaygeon Independent.

Lots of Wheat From India

Big Crop and Good Grain--No Need of Supply From United States

LONDON, July 16.—No explanation of reported cancellations of orders for wheat from America by the Entente allies have so far been obtainable. Persons connected with the wheat market, including a Government broker on the Baltic exchange, professed ignorance on the subject.

If was suggested by those in touch with the market that the report, if correct, might be connected with the fact that the Indian wheat crop was much larger and of better quality than anticipated, or the improved prospects of Russian wheat getting out through the Dardanelles.

Guarantee of Stated Price For All Grain

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The Cabinet is considering important recommendations concerning the supply of food, particularly wheat, made by the commission appointed in June by the Earl of Selborne, president of the Board of Agriculture, with Lord Milner as chairman. The nature of the report is guarded closely, but it is intimated that the recommendations include plans to increase the home-grown supply of wheat by guaranteeing to producers a minimum price for their product.

The Times urges the Government to act promptly, pointing out that farmers are gathering the present harvest and must decide on the uses of their land in the coming season. It adds:

"There is probably ground for conjectures that the recommendations involve a guarantee to farmers on a minimum price for wheat for a period long enough to justify them in putting a large acreage under cultivation. Whether this step is worth taking must depend to some extent on the view taken by the Government of the probable risk to imported supplies."

Owing to the magnitude of wheat importation from America, the action of the Cabinet on the recommendations of the commission probably will have a considerable bearing upon the overseas trade. The fact that the Government is considering the wheat question is suggested as a possible reason for the reported cancellations of orders for wheat from America by the Entente allies.

Italy's Boy Crown Prince Sells Photo For Charity

ROME, Aug. 16 — Democratic, friendly, the Royal house of Italy mingles with the mothers and wives and sisters and sweethearts of the men fighting at the front, in marked contrast to the situation at other of the war capitals, where royalty goes about guarded by bristling weapons.

The scene at the Red Cross Fair the other day could scarcely be repeated in any other monarchy in the world. The eleven-year old Crown Prince, dressed in a boy scout suit, stood in a booth in the gardens at the squirinal, selling his photographs for charity, while crowds of women pressed about him, exclaiming, "Isn't he handsome?" Such a darling little fellow."

"The little fellow, with a bright smile on his lips, and a frank look in his big brown eyes, was replying to questions put to him by admiring women in a most democratic manner. And while he talked and sold his photographs, murmurs were stirring other sentiments in the gardens of the Royal palace.

"Why does the King take such chances at the front?" ran the comment. "It would be a crime to burden such a child with the responsibilities of a kingdom at such a time."

In other parts of the garden the beautiful Queen Helena and the Princess Yolanda were selling chances for the Red Cross lottery. A small Red Cross ticket fee was the only requirement for entrance into the royal garden. And excepting few guards who quietly told visitors not to stop to look back at the Crown Prince, there were few precautions taken to safeguard Italy's royal family.

AUSTRIAS HAVE RESUMED THE OFFENSIVE ON THE SERBIAN FRONTIER

Bombardment of Belgrade Coming at a Critical Time in The Balkan Negotiations May Throw The Balance in Favour of The Allies.

ROME, Aug. 16.—The massing of Austro-German troops along the Serbian frontier and the bombardment of Belgrade coming at a critical time in the Balkan negotiations may throw the balance in favour of the Allies and bring Bulgaria and Roumania and Greece into the war.

Despatches from Bucharest and Sofia early to-day said the greatest alarm had been caused there by the news that the Austrians have resumed the offensive on the Serbian frontier, preliminary to an Austro-German drive through the Balkans to the relief of Turkey. Both Roumanian and Bulgarian diplomats here fear such a move threatens the national existence of their countries and are watching developments near Belgrade with the greatest anxiety. Both the Grecian and Serbian parliaments met to-day. The decisions they are to make possibly within the next fortnight probably will settle the fate of the Balkan States and will have a tremendous influence on the outcome of the world war. The meeting of Roumania Crown Council at Bucharest yesterday was another incident of the greatest importance in the Balkan situation. Both Bucharest and Sofia despatches to-day indicate that the latest move of the Austro-Germans has aroused the greatest dissatisfaction.

TURKISH TRENCHES BROKEN DOWN.

ATHENS, Aug. 16.—British reinforcements landed last week near Savla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula, have fought their way southward and effected a junction with the British New Zealanders near Gaba Tepe.

Despatches from Mytilene to-day said new British artillery broke down row after row of Turkish trenches along the Gulf of Saros shore, the Turks beating a hasty retreat.

WAR-WORN, BUT CONFIDENT, RUSSIA IS TRUE AS STEEL

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Col. Theodore Kitching, of the Salvation Army headquarters, in an article to the Chronicle from Petrograd dated July 21, communicates his impressions of Russia, war worn, wounded in mourning, orphaned or widowed, with the enemy at her front gate, and yet determined hopeful, secure in her faith of victory.

"Within the last eight months," writes Col. Kitching, "I have visited many European countries which are affected by war. In each case I have visited the capital as well as the smaller cities, and have seen something of the underworld of poverty and sorrow and death which pervades the homes of the lower classes as well as the grief and tears and sacrifice that reigns in the homes of refinement and luxury. Of all the cities I visited, in none is the fact of war more evident, and that at every turn, than it is in Petrograd. It is impossible to get away from the memory of war. Everywhere there are wounded soldiers and nurses.

HOPE REIGNS, NOT DESPAIR.

"And yet hope reigns, not despair. There are countless sad faces, but the sadness is rather the expression of sober determination than of grief or anguish. It is something that is typically Russian. It is something you feel you have seen before, but you know not where. And then you remember you have seen it years ago in some war picture of Vereschagin, and as you look again the very look makes you clench your teeth and set your chin and throw your shoulders back and say to yourself: 'Yes, we must go on; whatever the cost, we must go on to the end.'

"You may have to wait, but if you will only wait long enough you shall see this spirit of hopefulness, of resolute determination, of unshaken and unswerving confidence as to the ultimate issue. It was well put by an accomplished student, the proprietor of large estates, with whom I conversed.

PLENTY OF ROOM TO FALL BACK.

"'It is true our brave troops have had to fall back on some of our fronts,' he said, 'and they may have to fall back still further, but we have plenty of room to fall back. If we fall back from Warsaw, there is still Pinsk, in the Pripet marsh land. If we fall back from Pinsk, there is still Kiev. If we fall back from Kiev, there is still Kharkov, and if we fall back from Kharkov, there are still half a dozen places from which to fall back before we fall back from Saratov. And if we fall back from Saratov, there is still Vralsk and all Asia to fall back on.'

"In Government departments, Ministers, permanent officials, and junior clerks, all breathed the same unchanging spirit of hope and of confidence as to Russia's loyalty to her allies in their great cause. There is no possible question, nor can there ever be. All talk to the contrary is so much claptrap, the sensational talk of dissent and mischief mongers.

"Especially is this true of Russia's fealty to England. The fact that I was an Englishman claimed and won for me wherever I went the respect, courtesy, and co-operation of every individual with whom I came in contact. Official, clerical, and private alike, they counted me their brother in the great and mighty cause."

Canadians Again in The Thick of Battle

OTTAWA, Aug. 16.—It is believed at the Capital, although there is no definite information, that the first Canadian division after a month's rest for re-organization and recuperation, is again back at the front trenches and probably took some part in the recent Battle of Hooge.

The casualty list Saturday contained the name of Lieut.-Col. Victor W. Odlum, commander of the 7th Battalion, as having been wounded on August 9th. That is the date of some of the heavy fighting at Hooge. The 7th Battalion has been unfortunate in its commanders. Col. Hart McHarg was killed at the Battle of St. Julien. Lieut. Col. Odlum, then second in command, succeeded him, and now he is wounded. How serious his condition is is not known here.

Col. Odlum, whose home is in Vancouver, is a former well-known coast newspaperman; he was for a short time editor of The Vancouver World. He is a South African veteran, having enlisted while attending Toronto University.

RUSSIAN WOUNDED ARE SAID TO HAVE BEEN BURNED ALIVE

The war correspondent of The Novoe Vremya, writing from the Galician front, reports a case in which the Germans burned a large number of Russian wounded, together with the medical staff attending on them.

For some time, he writes, persistent rumours circulated here which seemed to be incredible, so terrible they were. Now I have on all hands that those rumours are true, and that an authentic report has been sent up to Petrograd. We brought with us a large number of infectious cases from the Carpathian Mountains and left them temporarily in a Jesuit college at Chyrow. They fell into the hands of the Germans, who removed them to an isolated wooden barrack, together with their medical attendants, shut all the windows and doors, poured petrolin over the buildings and fired it. More than a hundred were thus burned alive. The Germans do not deny the fact. I have the authority of a number of our officers, who have seen proclamations thrown over our position, by German aeroplanes, in which they point out that they were forced to resort to that cruelty by the necessity of order not to carry infection into their army, and also to teach the Russians not to leave their sick and wounded behind them, thus burdening the German medical staff. The proclamations express the hope that the Russians will learn to the lesson.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.
Mr. Putnam, South Lake, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a terrible eczema on the head. I tried Dr. Chase's Ointment, giving each a fair trial, but it did not help me. I then tried Dr. Chase's Ointment and Soap, and was completely cured by the use of two boxes of the Ointment and one cake of the Soap. I gave Soap and Ointment to others with like results. I want other sufferers to know about this splendid treatment."

CHAPTER FORTY-THREE.

Under Arrest.

The ranch-house was lit up when I arrived and I heard old Monody croonin' to himself as he put the finishin' touches to supper. Monody had got well contented by this time and while he grumbled considerable, it was just a soothin' sort of a dog-grumble that is three-fourths put on and never irritates anybody. When meals were late he'd rawhide anyone handy, but if no one happened to be in range, he'd hum tunes and go on addin' extras. A man cook for a man-outfit is about the most wearin' proposition a boss ever has to face; but Monody was just a sample from paradise to show what an ideal cook ought to be.

I whistled a careless tune as I passed the house and after I had tied Starlight in a little clump near to the blasted cottonwood, I sauntered back to the house where I found Jim on the front porch talkin' to the lantern-jawed deputy, from Paris, and two other hawks, and I knew there were seven others spyin' around.

Jim called me over to the porch and as soon as I stepped foot on it, the deputy sez: "You're under arrest," sez he.

I gave a scared glance at the roof of the porch and dodged to the right. "Under what?" sez I.

"Under arrest," sez he, scowlin' down his eyebrows.

"Well I thought I was feelin' kind o' queer," sez I. "Where am I goin' to be took to?"

"It youll make a clean breast of it and tell what's become of the Panhandle Kid," sez he, "why the matter mayn't you'll be dropped."

"That's fair enough," sez I, claspin' my hands behind my back and pacin' up and down the porch.

"Well," sez he after a time, "where is he?"

"I don't know exactly," sez I; "but after wed sent you word by Baldy Habus to come and watch the thicket down on the crick, he saddled up the best hoss in these parts and kept watch o' the trail Baldy told you to come. As soon as you passed he headed for the Territory, intendin' to keep on east till he reached the river and then go down it on a raft or a scow or s'methin' to New Orleans, where he was minded to get into a ship and sail for some foreign parts. He didn't find the climate here agreeable to him."

A drunkard don't have any real fun in gettin' drunk nor a chronic liar don't feel any thrill in tellin' hes; but a temperate man sure does get a touch of excitement by boltin' the track once in a while and cuttin' her wide open. The deputy glared in a way to give a timid man the ague, and his fingers worked as though their appetite for throats was gettin' keen and lively. The law may have the enforcement of justice as its main object; but law officers have just as much vanity as airy other humans and what they want is scalps.

"What do you think we'd better do?" sez he to one of his men.

"What we'd really ort to do is to ——— this feller full o' holes," sez he, glarin' at me. "I told ya you'd ort to keep watch of that one-legged scamp. Now, it don't make any odds whether either one of 'em or both of 'em was lyin', they've put us at a disadvantage."

"He's still in this house and I'll bet on it," sez the Paris man. "We saw the big woman smuggle in food and we heard a man's voice in there, and he's hidin' in there, somewhere."

He started to tramp the porch with his hands in his pockets, but when he was behind me he poked his forty-five in the small of my back and the other feller lifted his gun off my hip. "Go on in the house," sez the feller from Paris, "and stay there. It's surrounded, so don't try any breaks."

"What's the matter with me sittin' out here," sez I to sound him out. "This is an unusual warm even'——"

"Go on in the house," sez he.

I went into the house where all the curtains were drawn tight and spoke a few words to the Begum who was sittin' by the stand and after a time I told her a walk would do her good. At first she was leery about riskin' it and in the ensuin' discussion, I spoke free on the subject of deputy marshals. I told her to walk wherever she pleased, as though no one but decent folks were in that part of the world, and she started out wearin' a shawl of woollen lace around her head which she held up haughty.

She hadn't been gone more 'n a minute before the deputy from Paris and two of his men popped in, leavin' the door open a crack. I was amusin' myself by lookin' at a book of Jim's in a foreign tongue, and I nodded to 'em pleasant and went on just the same as if I could read it. They sure did give that house a searchin' but they never seemed to think about there bein' a cellar under it, and they finally lined up in front of me and began to fire questions at me in volleys.

In the midst of this there came a most outlandish clatterin' across the porch outside, and the deputies drew and prepared for war; but when Madame, the calf, burst through the door with a black cloth danglin' from his mouth and Isaac close in the rear, they were too surprised to move.

It was the top of his beloved umbrella which was hangin' from Madame's mouth and "the cruelty-to-dumb animals man was beatin' him scandlous with the handle and ribs. Madame was better 'n six months old by this time and he had outgrown everything else on the place—especially in devilment. He headed straight for the south wall, tried to turn, slipped, and slid along the floor until he fetched up hang agin' the soty, where Isaac, the adult, jumped astraddle of him and tried to get the top of the umbrella.

The strips which held up the trap-door had just been made temporary out of brush stuff and they had rotted. Madame and Isaac disappeared into the cellar with sundry and several noises, and the man from Paris looked at me with a grin and said: "Ah-ha!"

I jumped to and made for the gun-rack, but they covered me and made me back again' the wall at the far corner, and we all listened to the cellar. Isaac had been mutterin' audible at the calf's viciousness in leadin' him into makin' such a fool of himself; but his voice suddenly dwindled away and presently his head came up through the openin' lookin' like a mournful prairie dog. At a sign from the Paris man he crawled up into the room, still clingin' to his umbrella-stuck and to the top which he had managed to grab.

This fool calf had been made such a pet of that it was as full of nut sense as Flames himself, and when Isaac left it down there in the dark it began to blat. Next it seemed to be gettin' in somebody's way and we heard it get hit on the side of the head as plain as ever.

"You might as well come up out o' there without any fuss," sez the Paris man, standin' some distance from the openin', but speakin' mighty stern.

"That's an unusual smart calf," sez I, "but he don't understand English."

"I reckon there's a calf down there who does understand it," sez the Paris man, with a one-sided grin, "and he's goin' to get all the rope he wants."

He issued invitations and threats and all manner of inducements for Gerald Gerard alias The Panhandle Kid to come out, but didn't get any sort of a reply; and just then I heard the voice of Flames in the back porch whisperin' to me. He was too excited to tone down sufficient and I nearly coughed a cord loose givin' him the signal. Then I had to snap my fingers idiotic to get him up to pitch again; but finally I caught what he said, "They've took Starlight," sez he, "and put him with their hosses. Monody has got all his guns ready, and he sez he's goin' to mingle in with 'em in about five minutes if they don't turn you loose. What had I better do?"

If I had known exactly what the camel said while he was waitin' patient for 'em to put on the last straw which broke his back, I sure would have shouted it right out in meetin' at that moment. Monody hadn't stampeded for months, so I knew if he once started, it would stram the whole outfit to round him up. Belle Stern and her docile brothers were circling around all ready and eager to do any little jobs that a kindly fate threw in their way. Flames had got the idee that he had been promoted to be some sort of a commandin' officer, and Red and Shorty were liable to arrive at any minute. I groaned.

The Paris man whirled on me but as I was standin' quiet in the corner, he once more turned his eyes on the openin' into the cellar and just then his man Perkins came back with his arm full o' straw and some more wet straw in a bucket.

"I'll give you just one minute more to make up your mind," sez the Paris man speakin' into the cellar; "and then I'm goin' to throw some lighted straw down there and some wet straw on top of it. Hurry and decide."

"Youll get the calf out first, won't ya?" cried Isaac, in a horrified tone.

"To hell with the calf!" sez the man from Paris.

"But there's no outside opening, and the poor thing ll' smother!" yelled Isaac, in a shrill voice.

"Shut up!" sez the man from Paris. "Perkins, put down your straw on the floor. Then light a bunch of it and throw it in and some wet straw on top of it. You'd better soak some more, though, before you throw any in, cause as soon as we get it burnin' well, we want to draw that fur over the openin' and give him a good excuse for comin' out."

"Dont you throw any burnin' straw into that cellar," sez Jim Jimson, puttin' a sure-enough edge on his voice.

"You shut up, too," sez the man from Paris. "If you didn't want burnin' straw thrown into your cellar, you had no business to harbor outlaws."

"I didn't harbor any outlaws," sez Jim. "I've told you already that if any outlaws were hidin' in my house it was without either my knowledge or consent, and I gave you full permission to search my house and even ——"

"Shut up!" sez the man from Paris, who could speak these words most insultin'. "You're all in the game and you all got to take your medicine."

"We're peaceable," sez Jim, whose eyes were beginnin' to blaze; "but we don't intend to let any half-civilized oafs come in here——"

"You back up again' the wall there and stick up your hands," sez the Paris man, bendin' a gun on Jim.

A VEGETABLE OCTOPUS.

This Plant is an Electric Battery and Could Disable a Man.

All plants are electric batteries. Some are weak; others are strong. According to Royal Dixon, the strongest is the well known sensitive plant (Mimosa pudica), but the iris, nicotiana, nasturtium, and practically all the meat-eating plants produce a current of from .005 to .02 volt, which can be measured with a galvanometer.

"A very peculiar plant," writes Mr. Dixon, "and one which has tremendous electrical powers, is the 'telegraph plant' (Desmodium gyrans). It is a native of India, and each of its leaves is composed of three leaflets; the larger one stands erect during the day, but turns down at night, while each of the smaller leaflets moves day and night without stopping. They describe by means of jerking motions complete circles, not unlike the smaller hand of a watch."

Then there is the utricularia, or fishing plant, which lures small fish "into its capacious mouth and suddenly, as if an electric button were secretly pressed, closes in upon its helpless prey. In other words, it fishes with a net electrically wired!"

Near Lake Titicaca, in South America, and in the interior of Nicaragua is found a really terrible plant, a sort of vegetable octopus. This was first discovered by the naturalist Dunstan, who heard his dog cry out as if in agony. Running to his relief, Mr. Dunstan found the animal "enveloped in what appeared to him a perfect network of what seemed to be a fine, ropelike tissue of roots and fibers." He cut the fleshy fibers of the magnetized plant only with great difficulty. The dog was covered with blood. "The twigs curled like living sinuous fingers about his hands, and it required terrific force to free himself from the plant's electrical grasp, which left his hands red and blistered."

Lobsters and Crabs.

A fresh, healthy lobster, selected for boiling, will be dark green in color, be certainly alive, heavy for its size, and when lifted up the tail will spring back under it. When choosing a boiled lobster pull out its tail. If it springs back it indicates that the lobster was alive when boiled, but if the tail is limp you may be sure it is best to pass it by. Stale lobsters have an unpleasant odor. Feel under the large claws of a crab with the finger. If they feel sticky never buy them. When quite fresh the joints of a crab are stiff.

DIVINE JUDGMENT THEN DIVINE MERCY

God's Plan of Deliverance Not Yet Completed.

Divine Law of Retribution — Man's First Judgment Day—Death Sentence Pronounced Against the Race—Redemption Secured by the Death of Another Man—A New Trial for Mankind—Second Trial Individual, Not Racial—Messiah the Judge—Trial to Last 1,000 Years—Outcome Glorious.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Portland, Me., Aug. 15. Pastor Russell delivered a very interesting discourse here to-day on the text, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" (1 Corinthians 6: 2.) He spoke as follows:

Much confusion prevails through failure to understand the Divine application of justice in the world's affairs. Hitherto we have not studied our Bibles with sufficient care, but have jumped at conclusions and endeavored to make the Bible fit them. In every man there is some appreciation of justice, some realization that punishment ought to be inflicted for wrong-doing. Even those who practise wrong recognize this principle, and are ready to condemn others and to assist in punishing them, even though hoping to escape the fruit of their own sin.

The Bible clearly teaches that to some extent national judgments and punishments have been in progress for centuries, but that individual reckonings with Divine Justice are for the future—except as violations of Nature's laws continually bring retribution. It is in view of the fact that the Lord's judgment is future that Christians are exhorted, "Judge nothing before the time." Our incomplete knowledge renders even the most saintly liable to error of judgment. Christians have the promise that before their work as judges begins they will be qualified for it by a glorious change from earthly imperfection to Heavenly completeness in glory, honor, and immortality.

The Scriptures discriminate sharply between the judgment of the Church and the judgment of the world; and to read our Bible intelligently we must thus discriminate. God has not ignored sin during the past six thousand years. He is punishing the whole world every day. The penalty specified in the Bible is death, and our race is dying at the rate of one hundred thousand daily—exclusive of the great mortality occasioned by the European war. This death penalty has concomitants of trouble leading up to it—sickness, sorrow, pain—all of which are really parts of the dying process, and therefore parts of the penalty.

This penalty is not graded according to moral differences amongst men. Divine Justice merely decided that Father Adam as a rebel against the Divine Law had forfeited his life, and that none of his children could be born under conditions that would be perfect and satisfactory to God. Therefore Adam's death sentence passed by heredity upon all of his children, irrespective of their degrees of sinfulness. None of them being perfect, none of them therefore being worthy of everlasting life, all of them must die, whether with much or little pain; whether by famine or pestilence or war or accident. Justice took no note of the method of the dying, but merely of the fact that they must die. Similarly, human laws provide certain penalties for crimes, irrespective of the different conditions of the culprits.

God might have allowed the race to perish under that death sentence, or "curse." If so, the accounts of Justice would have been squared, and every man at death would have gotten his share of the penalty. Then there would have been neither future nor [illegible] for a death penalty [illegible] limit of Divine Law, as well as of human law.

But God purposed something better than annihilation for His human creatures. He purposed an exhibition of His mercy in combination with justice—the redemption of Adam and all of his family from the death sentence. The first step in this redemptive work was the death of Jesus as a corresponding price for the first man, who personally sinned and who was personally condemned. The redemption of the original sinner, through whom the whole difficulty came, would constitute a satisfaction to Justice on his account and that of all his family, who participated in his penalty.

Jesus' redemptive work was not with a view to getting people out of a fiery Hell of eternal torture; for there is no such place, according to the Bible. His death was to get mankind out of the Bible Hell—the tomb—the death state—Sheol in the Hebrew, Hades in the Greek. To bring Adam and his race back from the tomb signifies their resurrection. This is the promise of God's Word—that because Christ died for man's sin, therefore in due time "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust." Acts 24:15.

The theory that nobody is dead—that those who die merely change their form and live more fully—is in direct conflict with our observation as well as contradictory to the Bible, which declares that "the wages of sin is death," that "the soul that sinneth shall die," and that Christ died for man's sin in order to recover him out of this penalty of death and to make possible his re-living, his resurrection from the dead. Romans 6:23; Ezekiel 18:4; 1 Corinthians 15:21-23.

Having seen that God's judgment, or sentence against sin, went into effect six thousand years ago and is still in effect—that the whole world is dying—we ask properly, When will the new Judgment Day begin—the opportunity for Adam and his race to have another trial for life secured by God's mercy through the death of Jesus?

St. Paul answers our query, saying, "God hath appointed a Day, in which He will judge the world in righteousness, by that Man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead." (Acts 17:31.) St. Paul does not say that this Judgment Day has begun in his time; but that it was future, according to God's appointment, and as a result of Christ's death. He clearly intimates also that Jesus is to be the great Judge.

In this view of matters, the appointed Judgment Day is not to be a time of punishment for Adam's sin; for mankind already have been punished in the dying processes of the race for six thousand years. Nor is the coming Judgment to punish Adam's race because of their inherited weaknesses; for all those weaknesses were included in the redemptive work which the Saviour accomplished when "He by the grace of God tasted death for every man."

The coming Judgment Day simply signifies a fresh trial for Adam and his race. In the first trial in Eden, Father Adam failed, and he and his race all lost the perfect life with which he had been originally endowed, as a son of God. The new Judgment Day is designed by the Creator for the benefit of Adam and his race. In other words, it will be a second great trial of the race, the difference being that the trial will be individual, and the rewards or punishments individual, not racial.

During the four thousand years from the time of Adam's sin and his coming under the death sentence down to the time of Christ, God merely left the world under its penalty, and without any suggestion that well-doing or ill-doing would have any bearing upon their future destiny. The only exception to this rule was in the nation of Israel, Abraham's family. To Abraham, a man of [illegible] God's first declaration of God's purpose to bless the world. (Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.) Neither Abraham nor his children were delivered from the curse. He was merely informed that God had purposed another Judgment Day, in which all the families of the earth would be blessed and in which Abraham's Offspring would be the great Judge, through whom all the willing and obedient might be brought back to everlasting life and perfection.

God might have continued to deal with humanity exactly as He had done during the first two thousand years—might have left them in ignorance of His purpose to roll away the curse and to roll on a blessing. But another feature of the Divine Plan made it expedient to reveal certain features of the Divine purpose. He desired to select two classes from amongst mankind before He would begin the general work of giving a fresh judgment, or trial, for everlasting life to Adam and his race. In harmony with His Plan God revealed certain things to Abraham and his natural posterity, the Jews, up to the time of Christ. In His dealings with them He tested them and found certain noble, loyal, faithful characters, suitable to His future purposes. They are sometimes styled the Ancient Worthies, and are referred to by St. Paul in Hebrews 11.

In the closing verses of that chapter, however, the Apostle refers to the Church of the Gospel Age as constituting a different class of God's servants, as designed to receive at His hands still higher honors than the others. Note the Apostle's words of contrast. After speaking very highly of the faith of the Ancient Worthies, St. Paul explains that they died without having received the fulfilment of the promises made to them, all of which were earthly; and that they could not receive the fulfilment of their earthly promises until after the Church would have received and entered into her spiritual promises by the First Resurrection.—Hebrews 11:39, 40.

The Church, according to the Bible, is distinctly different from the world, and is to have a different kind of salvation from that provided for mankind in general. God's provision for humanity from the beginning was a perfect earth, suitable for perfect mankind; and all this was represented on a small scale by our first parents in Eden. God's Plan has not changed. The recovery of man from the death sentence will bring him to perfection and a world-wide earthly Eden, if he is obedient to the Divine arrangements. Otherwise he shall be destroyed utterly in the Second Death as the Scriptures repeatedly declare.—Acts 3:23.

As God prepared a worthy class during the Jewish Age to be His earthly representatives amongst mankind and samples of human perfection during the time of the world's judgment, or trial, similarly He has during this Gospel Age been selecting another class, spirit-begotten ones, who are to be perfected on the Heavenly or Spirit Plane, made like their Lord and Redeemer. (2 Peter 1:4; 1 John 3:2.) To Christ and His glorified Church God purposes to turn over the whole world of mankind, including those who have gone into the tomb.

This Messiah will be backed by all the Divine Power in His work of rescuing mankind from the fallen condition. Satan will be bound; all evil influences will thus be restrained. The darkness of ignorance and superstition will be scattered before the rising Sun of Righteousness. All mankind will be blessed—the living first and afterwards the sleeping ones "every man in his own order" or company—not all at once. For a thousand years a great work of judging will progress.

This Judging will not be punishments on account of Adam's sin or of inherited imperfections and faults—results of that sin. So far as the wrong doings of the present life are traceable to inherited blemishes, they will be covered by the merit of the great Redeemer's sacrifice. The only accounts remaining unsettled will be for those misdeeds and pernicious words of the present life done or uttered contrary to knowledge. The degree of knowledge will determine the degree of sin.

Each individual then on judgment, on trial, will have in himself the record of his own violations of conscience. That is to say, the unforgivable sins, which must be punished, are those against the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Righteousness, the Spirit of Truth—done intelligently against it. Thus the civilized could sear their consciences in a manner that the uncivilized could not; and those having a knowledge of God and appreciation of the principles of His righteousness could injure themselves for the future in a manner that more ignorant people could not.

Jesus declared that in the Day of Judgment those who did evil without knowledge will be punished with fewer stripes than will those who did less evil with more light. He gives us as illustrations the Sodomites of old, who were accounted most wicked, and the people amongst whom He was preaching, who counted themselves holiness people—Scribes and Pharisees. (Matthew 10:15; 11:22.) It will be tolerable for all, but less tolerable for those who have had more knowledge, more light, in the present life, and who have failed to live accordingly.

The period since Jesus' day, beginning at Pentecost, has been the Church's Judgment Day — her trial time. Only those coming into the True Church on the Lord's terms are privileged to have this special trial, and, if victorious, its special reward of glory, honor, and immortality in the Kingdom. The entrance into the Church is through the begetting of the Holy Spirit, and this begetting to the new nature is granted only to those who turn from sin, accept the Redeemer as their Advocate with the Father, and make consecration to do God's will.

As New Creatures, these have much advantage, in that God guarantees that "all things shall work together for good to them"—as spirit beings. This means, however, that they will be subjected to trials, difficulties, testings, much more severe than come to mankind in general; for they are being chiseled, polished, qualified, for the glories of the Heavenly Kingdom. They must walk by faith, not by sight. They must make a noble fight, in their hearts at least against sin and its allurements. They must prove themselves loyal to God, to His Truth and to His service, at the cost of even life itself.

The whole question we are discussing is summed up by the Lord in His Message through the Prophet Malachi (3:15-18). The Prophet declares that now we do not see evil-doers punished, even though they injure God's true people and blaspheme His name. But after God has made ready all the jewels of the Elect class and has set them in the gold of the Divine nature, there will be a change in prevailing conditions amongst men. Evil-doers will be chastised, with a view to their reformation. This failing, they "will be destroyed from amongst the people." Describing these Restitution conditions, the Prophet declares, "Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked."

What God purposes for the world through Messiah's Kingdom will be the grandest thing imaginable. Through this Kingdom, Divine judgments—justice—will be enforced everywhere — yet sympathetically. Each will be required to live up to the perfect standard of the Golden Rule, to the extent of ability; and the Royal Priesthood will be fully commissioned to remit penalties for unintentional transgressings resulting from inherited weaknesses. The reward to well-doers will be gradual growth in knowledge, in grace, in mental, moral, and physical strength.

Many find it difficult to understand how God's judgments could bring great blessings to the world. Hence we offer some suggestions: Suppose that the Kingdom were established, with Christ and the glorified Church in control, invisible to men, but all-powerful and all-wise. Suppose myriads of agents and agencies for the carrying out of the Divine will through this Royal Priesthood operating like the sound waves of the wireless telegraph. Suppose a contrite sinner earnest in his full surrender to the Lord, and imagine his acceptance to Divine favor indicated by a miraculous healing of some infirmity or by an enlightenment of mind permitting him to appreciate the Divine will. On the other hand, suppose a lover of sin attempting to commit wrong and receiving instant punishment—his hand paralyzed in the act of forging a signature or of taking the property of another—his tongue paralyzed in the act of uttering slander, profanity, or untruth.

How quickly the world would learn righteousness under such conditions! These very conditions we would now be naturally inclined to expect, but do not see; for God's great Plan has not yet reached completion.

NOTHING AS BAD AS TRAGEDY OF POLAND

War Still Making Desert of Wealthy Nation—Everything Ruined—Belgium's Easier Escape

Of all the regions suffering from the war Poland not only is the worst sufferer, but will require more time to recover, says the correspondent of the Associated Press in Warsaw. The case of the Belgians is plainly not so bad as the case of the Polanders. In comparison the Belgians had an easy time in escaping the horrors of war by flight to England and France. In Belgium the sweep of war was swift and final, while with the Polanders it has been always a matter of being swept in one direction and then the other. The area and population affected in Poland are more than ten times those of Belgium, considering both the kingdom of Poland in Russia and Galicia, Austrian Poland, equally devastated by the war. While at least three large relief committees are at work they have been handicapped by the fact that the war has been waged actively there ever since the European conflict began, and becomes fiercer as time passes.

Of the eleven provinces or governments of the kingdom of Poland only one, the province of Siedlce, has escaped invasion. The devastated territory amounts to more than 40,000 square miles, in which 200 cities and towns and 9,000 villages have been partially or entirely destroyed. Five thousand villages have been razed to the ground.

Railroad tracks for a distance of 1,000 miles have been torn up. The soil has been rendered unfit for tilling by innumerable trenches and big holes bored into it by heavy projectiles. The agricultural production of this part of Poland, representing $600,000,000 a year, has been stopped in its entirety for lack of funds, seeds, farmhands, and cattle.

An agricultural population of 7,000,000 has been starving in the early winter of 1915. The people hide themselves in forests or under the ruins of their former dwellings, having as food only roots, bark, rind, and decaying carcases of horses killed on the battlefields. The fate of cities and industrial regions is no better. The City of Kalisz, which before the war had a population of nearly 80,000, numbers now 10,000 inhabitants. Warsaw, twice as large as Brussels, harbors over 200,000 refugees. The city of Lodz (500,000 inhabitants), the centre of the great Polish textile industry, twice captured by the Russian and German armies, looks like a cemetery. Important industrial centre like Chenstohova, Sosnoviec and the coal basin of Dombrova have shared the same fate. The industrial output of Poland, valued at $400,000,000 a year, has been annihilated and three million factory and mine workers are starving. The coal mines, though not in the fighting zone, have been flooded by the Germans for strategical reasons and all the costly machinery destroyed.

The total of material losses is $700,000,000. Out of a total of 1,500,000 horses in the Warsaw district 800,000 have been requisitioned by both fighting armies. Not less than 2,000,000 cattle have been confiscated for the same purpose. Milk is rare and the mortality among infants shows a terrific increase. Sanitary conditions are worse than deplorable.

Not less than 2,000,000 cattle have been confiscated for the same purpose. Milk is rare and the mortality among infants shows a terrific increase. Sanitary conditions are worse than deplorable.

The conditions in Galicia (Austrian Poland) are worse. Galicia has 32,000 square miles and a population of over 8,000,000. All of her territory, except Cracow and its immediate vicinity has suffered. Many places were subjected to invasion seven times. 2,500 villages have disappeared. Eight hundred thousand horses and 1,500,00 cattle have been taken away by the armies, as well as almost all provisions like corn, potatoes and fodder. The total agricultural production of Galicia, valued at $200,000,000 yearly, and the industrial output of some $100,000,000 per annum, have been destroyed. Over a million Galicians are actually living as refugees in various parts of Austria-Hungary and are suffering there severely.

The countries of Cieszanov and Dovromil in Eastern Galicia and those of Lancut, Przeworsk, Nisko, Tarnobrzeg, Jasło, and Krosno in Western Galicia are so thoroughly devastated that they look as if they had been destroyed by some terrific earthquake. Of the total area of Galicia only 7 per cent. has been untouched by the war, 23 per cent has been partially and 70 per cent. totally ruined.

The devastation is the worst between Lodz and Warsaw.

Life-saving Rifle

A rifle that shoots over the parapet while the user sits in comparative safety in the trench without necessity for exposing himself to the fire of the enemy is a late invention brought out by a well known English sportsman and big game hunter. The feature of this invention is that the rifle is held vertically while the projectile is fired horizontally. This is accomplished by a curved deflecting tube fixed to the muzzle of the gun, that changes the course of the projectile from the vertical to the horizontal as it leaves the gun. In spite of the enormous friction that must accompany this change of direction the tube, as shown by actual tests, is not subject to excessive wear, while the effective range of a rifle equipped with this device is between 100 and 150 yards. The rifle is aimed by means of a periscope consisting of two mirrors, one fixed to the upper end and the other to the lower end of a tube that is mounted on the rifle barrel.

OUR ARMIES IN 1809

Tremendous Sacrifices of Men and Treasure Defied Napoleon

A little more than a century ago Britain, with a population of about a third its present size, was maintaining an immense army, scattered over the world. In 1809 the local militia alone numbered 200,000, and these were kept in training until the peace of 1815. More than half a million men were garrisoned in the United Kingdom, another 22,000 regulars were fighting in Portugal, while in India, Ceylon, the West Indies, North America, the Mediterranean, Cape of Good Hope, and Madeira were large bodies of British troops, struggling to keep the Empire together. Thirteen hundred Regulars guarded the convicts of New South Wales, and 18,000 more were on the high seas. And, in spite of a long war, costing $6,000,000 a week, the country managed to redeem millions of unfunded debt and show a brave front to the world, with bread at 44 cents a loaf.

A Schoolgirl's Noble View

She was a little French girl. Her teacher had told her to write something on the subject "What are we to do with our knitting needles when the war is over?" Here is what she wrote:

"It seems to me that there is only one thing to do. We must keep knitting for the children who have lost their fathers in the war, and if one of these children should thank us, we should say, 'What have we given you? Just a little wool and a little of our time, but you have given us your father, for it was to defend us that he gave his life.' As long as there are orphans of war in France, no French girl must lay aside her knitting needles."

FORGOTTEN BATTLES

Great British Victory in Persian Gulf Almost Unheard Of

Battles which before this war would have been considered of good size have been fought and practically overlooked in out-of-the-way campaigns, such as the British invasion of the Persian Gulf district of Persia. A young British officer writes the following account of an engagement near Shaiba, in which the Turks had 28,000 men engaged. "We have had our big battle here, and are nicely recovering. All are 'full of beans' and ready for further efforts.

The Turkish defeat was a magnificent affair and a far more crushing one than the accounts in the papers indicate. For two days some 28,000 Turks attacked the portion of our army situated in the defensive position. In regular German fashion, the pretty well completely enveloped our flanks, digging trenches nearer and nearer our works each night.

In case we attacked, they also had a permanent line of works in advance of which all their night approach trenches were. Well, our fellows, under General O——, endured a hot artillery and rifle fire for about two days and two nights at comparatively close range. During this time there were many many exciting minor incidents, such as cavalry charges, etc.

Our main effort took the place on the third day; it was, so to say, a case of 'Up Guards and at 'em.' During the hottest portion of the day our whole force formed line and went for the Turks. We drove them, headlong from their advance trenches until we came to their main position. This, after a most severe fight, in which the Turks showed themselves magnificent opponents, we carried at the point of the bayonet. During the last attack of ours the Turkish maxims were served superbly. They did all the damage to us. We captured most of them, killing the working parties. We became masters of the formidable enemy's line by evening time.

The enemy were routed there is no other word for it. In the rear of his lines were his camps. These were all abandoned. By the morning the remnants of their force were twenty miles away, by the next day forty miles. Into our hands fell nearly 1,000 prisoners, maxims, guns, hundreds of rifles, tents, medical stores and ammunition. This latter included seventy hundred boxes containing shells and about 1,000,000 rounds of rifle ammunition. All their foodstuffs were left behind, and, in truth, you can only call it an absolute victory. It was a stroke of genius our general's sudden lightning attack.

Turkish captured officers said, rather naively, that we didn't play the game. They expected to sap up to our position and have a regular kind of siege warfare. Of course, they had lots of Germans with them—mostly advisers. Poor Turks, these Germans appear to be only their evil genius!"

INCIDENTS OF THE WAR FROM A GERMAN VIEWPOINT.

RUSSIAN PRISONERS IN GERMAN HOSPITAL

GERMAN LANDSTURM ON THEIR WAY TO THE FRONT

German Army Discouraged, Naval Officers Hopeful, Swedish Captain Learns

In Conversations in Swinemunde He Is Told That Unless the Land Forces Can Win in Three Months the Nation's Position Is Critical.

(Special Despatch)

LONDON, August 14.

A Swedish merchant captain, whose steamship has arrived in the Thames after an exciting voyage, but who for obvious reasons does not care to see his name in print, had an interesting tale to tell about the optimism of German naval officers with whom he came in contact, as compared with the pessimism of the military.

When crossing the Baltic, he said, his vessel was "arrested" by a German destroyer, and, its cargo being suspicious, the ship was taken to the German port of Swinemunde for further examination. The innocence of the Swedish cargo finally was established, but incidentally the captain passed three days in Swinemunde, during which he had many opportunities of discussing the progress of the war both with German naval officers and with German military men, for the most part invalided from the front and residing in a wing of a Swinemunde hotel.

It was the opposite opinions expressed by these naval and military men which had so much puzzled this neutral skipper. Invariably the latter would preface every argument with the assertion that Germany had proved and would prove victorious, but they proceeded to qualify this assertion by the remark that, of course, Germany could not hope to prove victorious in a war of exhaustion. In fact, she could not possibly stand a war prolonged beyond the next few months, not alone because of the appalling drain on her man power, but especially because of the losses among the professional officers and non-commissioned officers, without whose lead the German private would not stand up to the enemy.

What the German army seemed particularly to dread was an allied advance from Italy into South Germany. If Germany did not win within the next three months or so her position would be desperate, they said, but she was sure to win within that time.

At the date of this conversation, it may be mentioned, the Russians were retiring all along the line in Galicia, apparently badly beaten.

The German naval men, on the other hand, seemed to take quite a cheerful view of the situation. Thanks to the number and efficiency of the German submarines, they thought the British could never venture into or even near the narrow waters and river estuaries on which Germany's North Sea harbors are situated. True, Germany's Baltic coast was more vulnerable, but there the Allied battle squadrons, before they reached the Baltic, would have to run the gauntlet of the German submarines in the Sound. And the submarine, so Admiral von Tirpitz's subordinates asserted, has rendered the battle ship quite useless. The French and Sir Percy Scott were right; the British could no more effect a landing on the coast than the Germans could carry out their original idea of invading England—an idea already abandoned by all the serious German naval thinkers, even before the war began.

A picturesque detail noted by this Swedish captain was the lavish consumption by German naval and military men of French cognac and other French liquors, such as chartreuse. Whiskey, however, they would not touch, as the product of hated Britain.

BOHEMIA, THE OPPRESSED, WAITING TO STRIKE BLOW FOR FREEDOM

Ten Million People Who Honor Memory of the Great Reformer, Johann Huss Have No Desire to Become Part of the "Greater Germany" Into Which Austria May Be Incorporated—Unrest Against Hapsburgs Grows.

(Special Despatch)

LONDON, August 14.

Writing from Milan, a correspondent tells of significant signs in Bohemia which augur ill for Austria. Ever since the beginning of the war, he says, all kinds of reports have been current regarding the attitude of the people of Bohemia toward the Austrian monarchy, reports which were for the most part in irreconcilable contradiction with one another. On the one side the official press agencies, the Kaiserliche und Koenigliche Correspondenz Bureau, and the government press organs represented the population of Bohemia as a model of fidelity to the house of Hapsburg and full of enthusiasm for the war. On the other hand, independent reports declared the country to be seething with sedition and almost in open rebellion against the war.

In the last week or two, however, things have happened in Bohemia and Moravia which leave no doubt that an acute conflict has broken out between the Bohemian people and the Austrian government. The arrest and condemnation of several influential Deputies to death for high treason in Moravia, suppression of several widely read newspapers, the distrust of the fidelity of Bohemian regiments and the deliberate removal of Bohemian troops from Bohemia and Moravia all give proof to unprejudiced observers that the anti-Austrian movement is a serious one.

There is not the slightest doubt that the Bohemian nation does not approve the war. Nothing can alter this fact, and no German-controlled organ is right when it declares that such an attitude gives grounds for anxiety.

The Bohemian constitution which from a juristical and historical point of view has the same value as the Hungarian one—has never ceased to exist. When Francis I. came to the throne in 1861 he solemnly recognized the Bohemian constitution. In 1865 the Emperor Ferdinand V. was crowned King of Bohemia in Prague, and the present Emperor has repeatedly recognized the rights of the Bohemian State. The various royal acts have, however, remained a dead letter, and up to the present time the centralized constitution, forced on Bohemia by German and Hungarian influence in 1867 in spite of the protests of the Parliament, has remained in force. Bohemia has always refused to recognize it. The autonomy of the kingdom was suspended on July 20, 1913, and a régime of pure absolutism introduced.

Absolutism in Bohemia, Parliament obstruction in nearly all the Diets of the monarchy, trials for high treason in north and south, with racial animosities roused to the highest pitch—such are the internal conditions when Austria entered on the present war. Germany had to save Hungary, Germany had to negotiate with Italy, and after a victorious war Germany is to "restore order" in the interior of the dual monarchy. This the German Austrians, who have hitherto supported the Vienna government, know full well, and this "imperial German internal order" is their uttermost desire. They make the secret of what this new "order" will be like or when the relations of Austria to Germany after the war will be. They have already found a name for it: the "Central solution of the German problem," the smaller solution having been those of 1866 and 1871. Germans will put a rapid end to all the national disputes from which Austria could never free herself by taking in hand political and economic reorganization of Central Europe.

It is not difficult to divine the Bohemian point of view in this situation. In 1848 the Bohemian historian Palacky sent his famous letter to the Frankfort Parliament, in which he defended against Germany Austria's right of existence. At that time the Bohemians and the Croatians took their stand against the Hungarian revolution. In 1866, also, when the victorious Prussians after Sadowa, by public proclamation promised them their rights as a State, the Bohemian people remained true to the Hapsburgs. They were still under the influence of Palacky's famous phrase of 1848: "If Austria did not exist we would have to create it."

But in 1872, after the failure of Bohemian's Bohemian "compromise" (Taaffe-Clerical), the same Palacky in his memoirs expressed quite another view. He regretted his optimism in 1848 and declared he no longer believed in the existence of an Austrian monarchy. He prophesied the present catastrophe, as I replaced the now quoted historical phrase by another, which has become equally celebrated: "We Bohemians existed before Austria and will continue to exist after she has disappeared."

The essential purpose of Palacky contains the whole programme of the present day Bohemia. The people of the Trentino and Trieste look toward Italy, the Serbians in Croatia and Slavonia desire a greater Serbia, the Hungarian Roumanians a greater Roumania, the Poles a free Poland and the Germans a greater Germany. Only the Bohemians believe that the Habsburgs will [illegible] that they will [illegible] with [illegible] Bohemia [illegible] Bohemia [illegible] Bohemia

TOWER HILL.

A Noted London Spot, the Scene of Many Famous Occurrences.

Tower Hill is perhaps both the most important eminence and the most notable spot in all London. Few of us think what great persons have quietly lived there and what others, equally great, have wept and died upon it.

To it, or rather to Great Tower street, came Rochester to pursue his trade as an Italian fortune teller, while the bedizened Buckingham often walked thither to consult a conjurer, a shrewd, farseeing rogue, who, when Felton bought at the cutler's shop on the summit of the hill for a shilling the knife with which he killed the duke's father, may have known for what purpose it was required.

William Penn was born on this hill in a house close to London wall. Forty-four years later—that is, in A. D. 1685—a poet lay dead, choked by a crust which starvation had urged him to devour too greedily, in an upper room of the Bull tavern. This was the ill fated Otway. At the time when the son of the muses lay dead Betterton, the celebrated founder of the stage after the restoration, was wringing tears from the eyes of the public, not for the famished dead, but at his own fictitious sorrows in "Venice Preserved."

It was in Great Tower street that Peter the Great used to pass his evenings drinking hot pepper and brandy with his boon companion, Lord Carmarthen.—London Standard.

ATHLETIC DEVOTIONS.

Gymnastic Exercises That Impressed the Kurdish Villagers.

Everything is liable to be misunderstood, even gymnastic exercises. This truth was brought home to George H. Hepworth, and he tells his experience in "Through Armenia on Horseback." The author was stopping in a Kurdish village, and the inn possessed but one general living room.

In the morning I began my regular gymnastics, stooping until my fingers touched the floor, throwing my arms about like the spokes of a wheel, striking out from the shoulder and going through all the exercises, none of which I ever omitted. I would gladly have taken a sponge bath, but it would have been impossible to get enough water. A pint is enough to suffice a Turk.

Well, I got under way with my exercises when I saw that my audience was excited; conversation dropped into a whisper, then ceased; word passed from one to another, and one by one the occupants of the room quietly left. I feared that they were offended and wanted to call them back and apologize. Just then my dragoman entered, laughing.

"What has happened?" I asked.

He laughed the harder as he replied: "The Kurds think you are practicing devotional religious exercises, and they retired under the impression that you would regard their presence as an intrusion."

Invisible Indians.

All Indians seem to have learned a wonderful way of walking unseen, making themselves invisible like certain spiders, which, in case of alarm, caused, for example, by a bird alighting on the bush their webs are spread upon, immediately bounce themselves up and down on their elastic threads so rapidly that only a blur is visible. The wild Indian power of escaping observation, even where there is little or no cover to hide in, was probably slowly acquired in hard hunting and fighting lessons while trying to approach game, take enemies by surprise or get safely away when compelled to retreat. And this experience transmitted through many generations seems at length to have become what is vaguely called instinct.—John Muir in Atlantic.

An Elusive Water Lily.

The water lily of the Amazon has very elusive habits. The buds open twice, the first time just a chink at the tip in the early sunrise hours, a sort of premonitory symptom. On the following evening it spreads its four sepals with such alacrity that you can see them move. But the big white bud among them remains unchanged until 4 o'clock in the morning, when it hurriedly spreads its blossom wide open, remaining in this condition only half an hour. Within the hour it has nearly closed, and by another hour and a half the entire flower has been drawn under water by the coiling of the stalk.

Diamonds.

Diamonds were first brought to Europe from the east, where the mine of Sumbulpoor was the first known. Golconda, now in ruins, was once a celebrated diamond mart. The mines of Brazil were discovered in 1728 and for a long time furnished most of the diamonds of commerce. In 1867 diamonds were discovered in Cape Colony, and in 1870 the wonderful finds in the Transvaal were made which resulted in the immense fortunes of the late Cecil Rhodes and others. Most of the diamonds of the world are now furnished by the South African fields.

TO PRESERVE YOUR RUGS.

Do Not Beat or Sweep Them Very Much—Fiber Easily Destroyed.

It is a mistake to have fine rugs vigorously beaten on cleaning day. The sharp beating with a stick as the rug hangs over a line is very injurious to the fiber, and only thick cheap rugs or the soft, beautifully woven rugs, with substantial cotton woven backs, will stand the treatment. Whacking with the end of the stick is especially inimical to silk oriental rugs which are used as couch covers. Such rugs should be well shaken and cleaned with a vacuum cleaner or a good carpet sweeper, and once a year should be sent to a professional cleaner who will repair any rents or frayed places in the rug and clean it by special process, which brightens the colors without injuring the fiber.

Never wipe off expensive rugs with soap and water or sprinkle wet tea leaves over them—an old fashioned cleaning day custom which may have improved the terrible flowered carpet of the Victorian period by softening and fading their strenuous colors, but which will do more harm than good to the soft tones of a real oriental rug or an axminster of modern subdued coloring. If you must wipe off the rugs with something use a cloth wrung out in turpentine, but beware of ammonia on soft hued floor coverings.

A new rug or carpet should not be swept with a broom. Use a carpet sweeper for several weeks until the pile becomes "set." Old fashioned housekeepers may tell you to sweep the new rug briskly to "remove the fuzz." What you will really be doing will be to sweep out some of the nap and probably injure the surface of the rug. If you must sweep, however, be careful to move the broom with the pile of the fabric and not against it.

Rugs should never be tacked down. If in certain places in the room they are apt to be rolled back or pushed about attach bits of black tape with snap fasteners at the end of the rug.

Killing the "Kick."

Most people know that when an ordinary rifle is fired it "kicks," and, indeed, will knock a man down unless he holds the rifle butt close into his shoulder. It can be imagined, therefore, what a gigantic "kick" a big field gun can give!

It has always been one of the problems to solve in firing these big guns, how to control the recoil. If it were not controlled the gun would jump back anything up to fifty yards, not only probably smashing itself up, but killing the gunners as well.

Springs and air chambers, of course, have been used, but it was found that they quickly got out of order. We owe to the Germans, indeed, the finding of the best method of overcoming the recoil.

Early in the war one of the big German guns was captured and brought to Woolwich Arsenal for a thorough examination. It was found that instead of using compressed air the special recoil chambers were filled with a compound of which glycerine was the chief ingredient.

Now many of Britain's big guns are fitted with these recoil chambers, and are fired with very little "kick"—thanks to that captured German gun!

"Alexander the Great."

The exploit of fourteen-year-old Alexander Cherviatkin, according to a Moscow correspondent, is without parallel, either in this or any other war. At Warsaw the boy was enrolled in a troop of scouts, and received orders to carry out a reconnaissance. Slipping out under cover of darkness, Cherviatkin made his way towards the German lines, but was captured. Owing to his youth, no strict guard seems to have been kept over him, and under cover of night he succeeded in creeping away through the German lines. But, not content merely with escaping, he had the audacity to steal a German flag from a sleeping standard bearer, and with his precious trophy he started on his journey home. Unfortunately he fell into the line of the searchlight. The Germans at once opened fire and wounded Cherviatkin in the side, but the boy managed to stagger into the Russian trenches, and was duly awarded the St. George's Cross.

Edmonton Women Organize.

Following the example of the women of England, the women of Edmonton have completed the organization of a Women's Volunteer Reserve Corps. More than 350 women have begun drilling.

The Nurses' Corps have been most friendly to each other in England and France. Some objection has been made to the discipline here and there, but perhaps it is more strict than is generally known in Canada. However, the splendid work of the trained nurse is more and more appreciated by those in authority. The nurses soon realize that they are members of the militia, for which they are doing their utmost. In the convalescent homes, too, the soldiers are the best patients possible, and instead of grumbling, an effort is made continually to lighten the burdens of the nurses.

One Severe Test Now.

A change in the regulations for recruits for overseas service has been approved by the Militia Council and Cabinet, and officially announced a few days ago by Senator Lougheed, Acting Minister of Militia. It stipulates that there will be but one medical examination. Previously there have been two examinations, one when a man first joined and second when he reached camp. The first examination was often rather lax and men who were accepted reached positions and were "farewelled" by friends, were rejected when they reached camp. Now the first examination which will be more rigorous will be final, men will not be subjected to the humiliation of returning home after being once accepted.

The Honeymoon.

"Mamma, is a honeymoon a vacation?"

"It may be, my dear, and it may be the beginning of a long period of servitude."—Youngstown Telegram.

What is the 7th point?

Because you put it in your mouth we make Sterling Gum clean—no hand but yours can touch it. No gum, we believe, ever before had so much care put into its manufacture. This care is to insure the six features listed below.

The 7th point will not be announced for the present.

1 Crowded with Flavor

First of all, we gave our attention to flavor. The highest grade of pure extracts was naturally needed.

After securing the flavor, a still greater problem remained. How were we going to drive that flavor fairly through and through—so that it stays in the gum? Right there was one great stumbling-block in the production of a high-grade chewing gum.

It is a stumbling-block which we have removed through an exclusive process which makes the Sterling Flavor permeate each stick—makes the gum, in short, "crowded with flavor"—cool, refreshing peppermint, or cinnamon—cinnamon that is fascinating in its delicious spiciness.

2 Velvety Body—NO GRIT

Next we set out to produce a gum that was absolutely free from grit.

This was a matter of refining and re-refining the chicle—a long, tedious process. But worth the trouble as every gum chewer will agree.

So Sterling Gum has a Velvety Body—NO GRIT. That is point 2. Rather important, too, isn't it?

3 Crumble-Proof

Heat, cold and humidity do their best to make gum crumbly. And they have their way very often, as you no doubt know.

We decided that Sterling Gum must be "crumble-proof."

After long experiment we finally made Sterling Gum by a new process. We—well, this isn't to be a lecture on science. The point is this: No matter when or where you buy Sterling Gum, you will find it "crumble-proof." You will find that each stick quickly becomes a velvety-bodied confection.

4 Sterling Purity

"Purity" is too often a vague claim. Sterling Purity is an actual fact. That means extreme purity of all ingredients—extreme cleanliness of plant and employes.

Just one incident to explain our ideas on the subject.

All gums use pulverized sugar—the same pulverized sugar that you put over your berries and cream in the morning. Clean, isn't it? Of course.

But not as clean as we want it. So we buy our sugar in granulated form and do our own pulverizing. The difference is not apparent to the eye, but, nevertheless, it is there.

It is attention to details like this which we sum up in Point 4, "Sterling Purity."

5 From a Daylight Factory

We make Sterling Gum in the sunlight where everything is spotless.

During every working hour, the daylight streams through the broad, high windows of our factory.

There are no dingy corners. Cleanliness everywhere. This environment, too, naturally has a wholesome effect on our employes.

6 Untouched by Hands

But Sterling purity and a daylight factory need this Sterling 6th point to provide a genuine hygienic safeguard.

A company rule makes each employe wear spic-and-span uniforms and caps and gloves of white. These white gloves are fresh-laundered every morning.

That insures Sterling Gum Point 6, "Untouched by Hands."

(7) What?

The 7th point of Sterling excellence we are keeping in reserve. We will not make it public for the present.

But that 7th point is there for a very good reason. It is perhaps the most important of all 7 points of Sterling excellence.

Let's see if you find Point 7 in the gum.

Advise England to Save

The British Treasury has issued a series of popular leaflets for different sections of the British public, advising them how to save. The idea is to vary the advice in accordance with the type of house in which a man lives, this generally being an index of the standing charges on which a man cannot, with the best intention in the world, economize. It is advised, for example, that all notion of keeping up appearances should be abandoned, and saving is commended to Britons as a patriotic duty.

Nicknames for Warships

Nicknames are popular in the Navy as well as in the army. Sometimes they are popular because they are humorous. Sometimes they are popular because they get the speaker out of difficulties.

Thus, for example, the Bellerophon is popularly referred to among sailors as Billy Ruffian; the Niobe is styled Nobby; the Temeraire is called the Trimmer-air; the Andromache changes her nationality from Greek to Scottish by becoming the Andrew Mackie; while the Atlanta becomes the Hat-and-Lantern—for which there seems no excuse.

Battleships with French names are nearly always pronounced humorously, since sailors find it so difficult to pronounce them a la Paris. What would you guess to be the real name of the Sam Perry? Sanspariel, of course. And of the Jenny Rooks? Genereux!

In similar fashion, we find the Bienfaisant nicknamed the Bonny Pheasant, the Immortalite nicknamed the Immortalight, and the C'a Ira nicknamed, in homely manner, the good old Sarah!

IN DREAD OF CROUP.

Every mother dreads croup unless she knows about Dr Chases Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Given in frequent small doses, at the first indication of trouble, this treatment loosens the cough and affords relief and comfort. Its use should be kept up until the child is entirely recovered.

A Great Work of Art.

It was Apelles who visited the studio of Protogenes in Rhodes and, finding the artist absent, drew a thin colored line in such a way that the latter knew that only his brother in art could have done it. But, not to be outdone, Protogenes drew a thinner line upon that of Apelles, and when this was seen Apelles drew a third line upon that of Protogenes. This panel was then looked upon as the greatest work of art, so says the story, in the palace of the Caesars.

Why He Got Up.

It was only about noonday, but the commuter yawned. He yawned heavily two or three times.

"Got up at 6 o'clock," he explained. "Had to catch my train. When my wife waked me I said to her: 'Six o'clock! The chickens haven't begun to crow yet, have they? Why must I get up before the chickens do, I'd like to know.'

"'I don't know,' she said, 'unless it's because you're no chicken.'"—New York Press.

Why Soldiers Need Teeth.

That recruit who on being rejected on account of his teeth said he did not know he had to bite the enemy had evidently not realized the possibilities of an army biscuit. Its ingredients are meal, salt and water, kneaded by machinery into a thick paste and baked – hard; but, though it requires "some" teeth to tackle it, yet it has good points. It is highly nutritious; a pound of bread is equal to but three-quarters of biscuit. It does not easily turn bad or get stale, and it can be packed into the knapsack, mixing on equal terms with the heterogeneous collection of articles that it always contains, and it emerges triumphantly as a biscuit and not a heap of crumbs.—London Mail.

Dumas and "Monte Cristo."

Alexandre Dumas, the great French novelist, never set foot on the island of Monte Cristo. When visiting Elba in 1842 the novelist sailed across to Monte Cristo in the hope of shooting some wild goats. On the point of landing, however, he learned from one of the sailors that, as the island was uninhabited, no boat was allowed to touch there under penalty of six days' quarantine at the next port of call. It was therefore decided not to disembark, but Dumas insisted on rowing all around the island, because, he told his companion, Prince Napoleon, "I intend in memory of this trip with you to give the name of Monte Cristo to some book I shall write later on."

Turkish Titles.

"Pasha" is the only Turkish title conferred personally by the sultan and the only one which carries any precise rank. Originally confined to princes of the blood, it is now conferred on military men, governors, etc., whose rank and merit are sufficiently high. All other titles—aga, bey, effendi, etc.—are conventional additions to names and obey no hard and fast rule. Governors of provinces are beys, so also is any person of rank, many military men and government officials. An aga might be one occupying a confidential position in the sultan's seraglio or merely a retired official, an army officer, or a big landowner.

Quaint Advertisement.

A quaint advertisement in the New York Weekly Post Boy of Dec. 8, 1746 gives an interesting view of the commodities market activity at that time:

"Peter De Joncourt, living near Coenties market, having left off keeping tavern, continues to sell out of doors by small measure good old Madeira wine, Jamaica rum, French brandy, Batavia arrack and claret. He also sells by retail sundry sorts of dry goods, all sorts of spice, tea, coffee, raisins, sugars, etc. He likewise keeps very good accommodation for lodgers.

"N. B.—He will sell coffee by the half dozen pound or any large quantity at 17 pence half penny per pound."

Not Too Liberal.

Some time ago there was a beautiful girl who had a fiance named Jones. She also had a little brother named Willie. One morning Willie was thoughtfully sitting at the breakfast table, when he suddenly turned to his father.

"Say, father," said he. "I don't think that Mr. Jones will make a very good husband for sis."

"You don't, eh?" was the indulgent response of the smiling parent. "What makes you think so?"

"Because," was the prompt rejoinder of Willie, "he has been coming here a year now, and in all that time he has given me only 17 cents."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

FAITH THROUGH ADVERSITY

THUS said the Lord God: I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come.—Ezek. 11:16.

The prophet Ezekiel was at this time a captive in Babylon, an exile in a heathen country, like many others of his own people. Although the prophet was undergoing a severe testing time, as were also his people, yet he was making it his purpose to sustain the faith of the exiles, and assure them that in His own good time God would bring them back into their own land. One of God's promises which Ezekiel delivered to his people, was that He would be to them "a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come."

A man once asked Lyman Abbott what reason he could have for believing in the love of God, when disaster came after he had done his best for ten years to raise peaches. The answer he received was: "If the object of the Creator is the making of peaches, the illustration of your peach orchard would be a conclusive argument against belief in His intelligence; but if the object of the Creator is the making of men, just such exigences as occurred in your peach orchard may serve an exceedingly useful purpose in the creation of character."

It was hard for God's chosen people to see His love in the hardships which they had to endure in captivity, as it was also difficult for the man who was endeavoring to grow peaches without success. It is just as hard for us to see God's love when we are endeavoring to do our best and everything seems to be against us. Should we not realize, however, that if goodness always brought outward success, we would be very apt to serve God only because it was profitable to do so.

Through our adversities we may, if we will, learn lessons in patience, courage and trust. While there are many things in life that are perplexing to us, and we fail to understand why we should have such trials, should we not keep in mind the thought of God's promise to the Babylon captives. "I will be to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come."

Never put food away in the safe until it is quite old, or it will probably turn off. Never let anything cool with the lid on. Never leave a metal spoon in any food, even a silver spoon is affected by salt. Never let anything remain all night in a saucepan—and especially not in enamel ware, many deaths have been caused by the neglect of this rule, since foods will often become poisoned by being allowed to stand in such cooking utensils. The only really safe receptacle for food to remain in is one of china, glass, or crockery.

COURAGE IS COMMON IN THIS WAR.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Every Englishman knows how to die bravely. The Irish, Scotch and English soldier face the bayonets, the machine guns as though out on dress parade. It is the men who sicken and die in the trenches, or at home after an arduous campaign that our sympathy goes out to most. There are thousands of men behind the battle lines who are not to the front without the strong constitution and good pure blood to withstand the deprivations, the hardships of the campaign in Belgium and France. It's a warning that we should pay strict attention to our stomach, liver and blood. If one is all out of sorts he should take an invigorating tonic and alterative such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which cures diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. It eliminates from the blood disease breeding poisons. It makes the blood rich and pure, and furnishes a foundation for sound, physical health. Forty years ago, Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N.Y., found that certain barks and roots manufactured by using glycerine without the use of alcohol or opiates, made into a concentrated extract which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, made a stimulating tonic for the stimulation of the food and eradicated stomach, helped the digestion and asperions from the blood. This is nature's cure for indigestion, and by correcting the stomach, and thereby feeding the blood on pure materials, the red blood corpuscles are increased and the body established in a healthy state. No one suffers in a healthy state. No one suffers from catarrh who has plenty of red blood corpuscles and a good digestion. Catarrh in all its forms is a stagnation of the blood. Introduce pure red blood into the system by taking the "Medical Discovery" and health is assured.—Adv.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

DRESSING SACQUE TO BE MADE IN HOUR.

By Anabel Worthington.

With the first faint hint of summer in the air we begin to plan garments which will be loose and thin and cool. In doing so the dressing sacque takes a foremost place for the woman who can stay at home. Something that takes only a scrap of material in an hour's time in the making is sure to make an appeal even to the idle, for it leaves just that much more time for a more congenial occupation than dressmaking.

In the design which is herewith shown simplicity is reduced to its extreme. From 27 inch material the sacque can be cut with only one seam, and that down the centre of the back. This is therefore the most economical width to purchase, for it means no piecing. At each shoulder there is a small graduated box pleat which gives a little extra material along the outer sleeve, and with the kimono cut this means ease in moving the arm. The neck opens in V shape and the edges of it as well as those of the sleeves and of the lower edge of the garment are trimmed with a band of some fabric in contrast with the main portion of the gown.

When challie, cashmere, voile and the like are used ribbon velvet will make a nice trimming, but if the garment is ever to be tubbed it is better to use a wash braid or a bias band of other wash material. Organdie will be found ideal for this garment, and also wash silk, cotton crepe, dotted swiss and many of the mercerized cottons.

The sacque pattern, No. 7283, is cut in one size only. To make it will require 3¼ yards of 27 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

THE FRENCH SCORE IN A MINE ATTACK

BATTERY RECRUITS LEAVE TO-NIGHT

FRENCH MINE ATTACK HAS HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL RESULT

Enemy's Works in Vosges Are Skattered Along a Wide Front And French Chasseurs Drive Through The Resulting Gap---German Bomb Machines and Prisoners Captured By The Victors.

NORWEGIAN STEAMER SUNK BY SUB

PARIS, Aug. 16. The French Chasseurs in the Vosges exploded a big mine under the German trenches at a point between Burnhaupt and Amfertzwiller, wrecking the enemy's works along a wide front in yesterday's fighting. Through this gap the "Blue Devils" charged, driving the Germans who survived the explosion down the communication trenches leading to the rear. The collapse of the earthworks imprisoned a number of Germans, who were dug out and made prisoners. The Chasseurs also captured two bomb machines and a Mittralleuse. "An intermittent cannonade proceeded throughout the night in the region of Souchez and on the Neovarnu plateau," said the official statement this afternoon. "There was bomb fighting near Quennevires Farm, south of Arras, and also in the Western Argonne."

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The Norwegian steamer Albis has been sunk by a German submarine. The crew whs saved.

RAIDED THE COAST.

ATHENS, Aug. 16. The Allied warships raided the Asia Minor coast near the Gulf of Smyrna on Saturday, shelling the Turkish encampments at Dekeli, Phocea and New Epesus. The Turks fled to the interior.

LONDON, Aug. 16. — General Sam. Hughes, the Canadian Minister of Militia, declared at a meeting here last night that two thousand Americans have enlisted with the Canadian forces, and that more than 100 have been killed in action in Flanders.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 16.—R. A. Thomas, representative in Canada of Mr. Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions in the British Government, had a long conference this morning with Hon. W. T. White, the Minister of Finance. He leaves to-night for Toronto regarding the munitions manufacturing in Central and Western Ontario.

LONDON, Aug. 16. — Military operations in the Eastern field are developing slowly. Both sides show the effects of the intensity of the Warsaw struggle. The German advance now centres on the efforts of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg to force troops across the Dvina. The Germans are evidently short of ammunitions.

Notwithstanding the steady pressure of the Germans, the Russians have succeeded thus far in holding them at the Dvina River.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The Chronicle's correspondent writing from Nancy says: "We are in the midst of preparation for an effort, the magnitude of which was not known anywhere, and could not have been anticipated. The central Empires are approaching the point of exhaustion. The further the Russian campaign goes the sooner this point is reached. Then with fallen numbers will come the imperative need to shorten the German front, a perilous operation which the lynxess of the French, British and Italian armies will not allow to pass undisturbed.

THE CITY LEAGUE AFFECTED BY THE RECRUIT CAMPAIGN

Dan McCabe's East City Team Pretty Well Broken Up by The Appeal for Men to do Their Bit In The Trenches and Factories

SEC'Y CARR ENLISTS

The recruiting campaign has already had its effect on the City Baseball League. The greater part of the Thistles had already volunteered and now Dan McCabe's leaders, the East City's, have the enlistment fever. Third Baseman Alex. Butcher and Second Baseman Alf Hagerman, have enlisted in the 33rd Battery, where they will be under the wing of their old enemy, in a baseball sense, Lieut. Mererith Huycke, the Thistle's crack pitcher. Two other of the East City players, Shortstop Frank Barrie and Outfielder Art Primeau, are also going to do their bit in another way, the two boys leaving to-day for Scotland, where they are to work on war munitions. This takes three quarters of the East City infield away.

This morning Harry Carr, the genal secretary of the City Ball League, enlisted with the 33rd Battery. He will not be one of the recruits leaving tonight, but will go to Kingston in the next draft.

BIG UNITED SHOWS NOW AT FAIR GROUNDS

What is considered the largest carnival company on the road, arrived in town last night and will be going in full bloom at the fair grounds when the curtain rises at 7 p.m. to-night. The Livett and Meyerhoff shows comprised of 14 up-to-date, refined shows, and 40 concessions, with three of the latest riding devices, are an aggregation that represents a large expenditure of money and should be witnessed by thousands during the week.

The feature attraction is Princess Victoria, the smallest lady on earth, standing 25 1-5 inches in height, being 23 years of age. She plays 6 different musical instruments and possesses a wonderful voice. She gives a performance that is never forgotten by anyone paying her a visit. She is playing in aid of the Red Cross Fund.

The great wild animal show, with its 6 hair-raising acts, stands out by itself as far as wild animals are concerned, with lady and gentlemen trainers

Owing to the fact that we are late in going to press, we will outline the remainder of the shows in tomorrow's paper

Remembered By Fellow-Employees

Gunner J. T. Parkes Presented With Pipe—Leaves For Barriefield To-night

Gunner J. T. Parkes, 585 Park Street, who leaves tonight for Barriefield, was this afternoon remembered by his fellow employees on the Hunter Street sewer construction. The foreman, Mr Thos P. Moore, on behalf of the men, presented Gunner Parkes with a handsome pipe, and in doing so expressed his regret at losing such a good workman, but at the same time spoke in admiration of the splendid spirit he was evidencing in leaving a wife and family, to join the colours. He wished him God speed and a safe return.

Gunner Parkes was greatly surprised but expressed his thanks and appreciation in a suitable manner.

NEW PATRIOTIC SONG FOR RECRUITING MEETING

The following patriotic song, entitled "Motherland," (Hamilton will be sung at the recruiting meeting in Central Park on Tuesday night, by Mr Harry Hill

Fling out the flags, ring out the bells,
We're all in earnest here, to-day;
The note of triumph soon shall swell,
Give joy its full astounding sway.
Out volley from your million throats,
A British welcome, cheer on cheer,
To greet our lads in khaki coats,
Our lads so dauntless and so dear;
That stands for one, for Britain's fame;
The folk that give her one fond name
(Chorus)
Motherland! Motherland!

See thy children, hand in hand,
Forth from home they gladly come
In answer to thy cry.
One for thee, all for thee,
Thine to fight, or fall for thee,
Sons of that great motherland,
Whose name shall never die.

Shout for our own blood of East and West,
Our splendid kindred from afar;
Whose grit and comradeship attest,
How firm their faith in Britain's star
Our brothers! let the world take heed,
We are one people, tried and true,
And Britain, in her hour of need,
"Motherland" our Empire through (Chorus).

THE CALL TO ARMS

Saturday Night Recruiting Rally Which Was Held in Central Park Included a Reception to Private Arthur Noble—Patriotic Addresses by Local Speakers.

APPEAL TO MANHOOD

Saturday night's recruiting rally in Central Park was a decided success from a platform standpoint. What the actual results may be in the way of new recruits remains to be seen. Speeches of a patriotic character were delivered by Mr J. H Burnham, M.P., Lieut Col Stevenson, Rev. F. Battersby of St. Paul's Church Peeton, and His Worship Mayor Buller. Private Arthur Noble of the First Canadian Contingent, and lately invalided home, also spoke a few words to the large gathering that crowded around the bandstand. An excellent programme of music was furnished by the bands.

His Worship Mayor Buller, who acted as chairman, issued a challenge to the manhood of the country to go forward and assist in furthering the object for which the Empire is fighting. He then called upon Mr. J. H. Burnham who addressed the gathering in the following terms

Appeal to the Native Born.

Mr. Burnham said

I wish to speak particularly to my own countrymen, the native born.

Do we care enough about the issue to fight? Or are we indifferent to the outcome?

Many Canadians say that Canadians would fight if they had to defend Canada, but that they are not concerned with old world politics. This is not old world politics. It is all the world politics. It is such a conflict as has not occurred since Persia tried to overthrow Greece and impose the absolutism of the East upon the peoples of Europe. The British Empire is fighting for the cause of freedom—the Germanic empires are fighting for the military domination of the world, for the substitution of military rule for the rule of the people on a peace principle. The march of freedom is challenged by the host of despotism and if despotism wins it will be able by means of its concentrated power to smash free popular government the world over. Canada in that event, would be ruled by a military police, not by the votes of its people. When we realize this fact we must ask ourselves why we hesitate? Are we doing all we can to stay the destroying conflagration? If we are we can but go on and do our best. If we are not we must stop and ask ourselves the question "What are we going to do about it?" It is impossible to suppose that the native born Canadian does not know enough of the facts staring him in the face to realize the consequences, and it is

WILL NOT BE RESTRICTED

Shipments of War Supplies to The Allies Will Continue, The United States Informs Austria-Hungary

FIRM STAND TAKEN

WASHINGTON, Aug 13. — Austro-Hungary and Germany now know officially that there is no hope of the United States discontinuing or even restricting shipments of war supplies to the allies.

This the Teutonic Governments have learned from the note which the State Department has sent to Austria and which was made public here today. This communication is in the form of a reply to the Vienna protest against the business being done by Americans in war munitions sets forth the attitude of this Government clearly and firmly. Austria is notified flatly that this Government will not even consider acceding to her request. So strong is the stand taken by the Washington Government that this note not only will probably end the diplomatic exchanges on the subject, but will operate as a distinct check upon sentiment developing in this country in favour of an embargo. While President Wilson in this note as in all others to European Governments on the war issues, takes his stand firmly upon the principles involved and upon usage of nations, he introduces another feature which by many is regarded as the most striking in the note. The President bases his refusal to consider the Austrian suggestion on the practical grounds of its effect upon the ability of the United States to meet a foe in the event of war.

The Government tells Austria that it has been the policy of the United States from the founding of the Republic not to maintain in time of peace a large military establishment or stores of arms and ammunition, that the United States has in fact always depended upon the right and power to purchase arms and ammunition from neutral nations in case of foreign attack.

In citing the democratic policy against militarism the American note makes this remarkably frank acknowledgement:

"In consequence of this standing policy the United States would in the event of attack by a foreign power be at the outset of the war seriously, in not fatally, embarrassed by the lack of arms and ammunition, and by the means to produce them in sufficient quantities to supply the requirements of national defence"

BATTERY RECRUITS LEAVE TO-NIGHT FOR BARRIEFIELD CAMP

First Draft for New 33rd Battery Will Get a Royal Send-off—Infantry Recruits to Escort Their Commrades to The G. T. R. Station.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The first draft of recruits for the new 33rd Battery, C.F.A., C.E.F., enlisted here by the 20th Field Battery, will leave to-night at 9 o'clock for Barriefield Camp, and will be given a send-off by the citizens. They will be escorted to the station by the infantry recruits of the 59th Battalion, and by the massed 57th and Temple Bands. At 8 o'clock the band will fall in at Central Park and at 8.30 o'clock the artillerymen will be addressed by Mayor Buller, after which the parade to the station will take place. The exact number leaving to night could not be ascertained this afternoon, but the first draft will number some thirty men in charge of Lieut Meredith Huycke. Eight are in the hospital for minor operations, and a number of others are being kept for the next draft. The call to men for the artillery units is being quickly responded to, and Peterborough will be well represented in the new battery. Among the men are a number of South African veterans. A partial list of the recruits who will leave to-night is as follows: E. J. Graham, A. Goodman, Roy Harper, A. Leach, H. Knowles, W. S. Hake, Chas. Cook, J. Hawthorne, F. W. Eggleton, Jas. F. Weese, Henry Smith, Herbert Turton, A. G. Austin, A. Skarnzo, G. H. Flint, W. T. Hawthorne, J. T. Parker, A. E. North, G. Degen, D. F. Fowler, R. Chambers, H. B. Haines

There will undoubtedly be a big crowd of citizens out to-night to say farewell to the battery draft. The recruiting headquarters at the corner of Hunter and George streets, will be open until 10.30

Big Turnout To-day

Capt Maurice Park of the 59th Battalion had sixty two recruits on parade this morning. Recruiting was brisk over the week end and this morning's parade was a record one. The men were kept hard at work for several hour and are showing the effects of their training. The afternoon the detachment had a route march, and to-night they will take part in the send-off to the artillery recruits. Lieut R. J. Stratton of R.M.C. who has been awarded a commission in the Royal Engineers, and who is awaiting instructions to report in England is a member of the orderly room of the 59th.

Lieut Gordon H Grahame of the 2nd Battalion invalided home from France, who has been resting at Stoney Lake was in the city to-day to undergo a medical board who will decide as to the length of his furlough.

Peterborough has become quite accustomed to the appearance of soldiers in khaki uniforms, but the blue garb of the jolly jack tar is a novelty to the inhabitants. The latest was that Albert Miller of H.M.S. Niobe, who is visiting his home in Peterborough for a few days, attracted considerable attention on the street this morning.

Church Parade.

The Peterborough detachment of the 9th overseas battalion paraded to St George's Anglican Church yesterday morning, where divine service was held. Headed by the band of the 57th, assisted by some members of the 57th, the recruits were an imposing body, as they marched through the streets. The service was held in the large congregation overtaxing the seating capacity of the church. The music was of a bright and inspiring character, the great audience joining in the accompaniment of the singing.

A stirring address was given by the rector, Rev. Ian Pitt, who spoke from the moral point of view of the military life. Mrs. Ryerson Pitt sang a solo in splendid voice, her clear soprano ringing a profound impression on all who heard it.

The service was entered into in a great enthusiastic spirit, the congregation heartily joining in the responses and singing. The band at the conclusion played "Soldiers of the King" and the National Anthem.

BRANTFORD HAS RAISED BIG FUNDS FOR MACHINE GUNS

$20,000 Mark Aimed at Has Been Surpassed — Windsor Council Has Contributed $2000 for Fund

MARIPOSA'S GIFT

BRANTFORD, Aug 15 After slightly more than one week, the campaigning for the $20,000 fund with which machine guns or other military equipment will be purchased for Canadian troops in France, has now been brought to a success-ful conclusion. Not only has the amount aimed at been fully subscribed, but it is probable that two or three thousand more will be turned in. The fund was given a boost yesterday morning when the employees of the Massey-Harris Company undertook to supply money for one machine guns, which costs $1,000. Two other large subscriptions were also received in cheques for $500 from John Coboe and Franklin Grobb. The fund to date now totals $20,442.36, and there are still a few lists to be turned in.

Field Kitchen for 59th.

Lindsay, Aug 15 - (Special) Yesterday afternoon a deputation consisting of John Catew, M.P.P., F. D. Moore, K.C., C. E. Weeks and Major A. J. Williams attended the session of the Mariposa Township Council at Oakwood and presented the claims of the 59th Battalion regimental fund. The deputation was most kindly received, and Reev. Elwin Rogers promptly proposed that the township contribute the price of a field kitchen amounting to $450. His colleagues promptly and unanimously agreed.

Raising the Funds.

Windsor, Aug. 15 Not only will this city contribute towards the purchase of an aeroplane but in addition it will furnish funds for at least two machine guns for the force.

The Finance Committee of the City Council has recommended $2,000 as preparation for the guns, and a subscription has been started by the citizens for another sum.

Boy Was Shot Through The Eye Killed Instantly

The funeral of the late Clarence Guerin, the eight-year-old boy who was accidentally shot on Saturday while visiting in Dunoo took place yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock from St. Vincent de Paul Orphanage to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

It seems the little fellow was looking down the barrel of a twenty two cal bre rifle, not knowing it was loaded. The bullet entered the left eye and went out at the base of the brain. Death was instantaneous. The surviving brother and sisters have the sympathy of the community in their sudden bereavement.

The pall-bearers were his two brothers, Freddie and Albert Guerin, also Harold Sweeney and Donald McGregor

CIVIC RELATIONS.

The hot weather had the effect the other night of sending the Board of Works to the shade of the street trees, which formed a subject of discussion. While the action taken is not greatly objectionable, the whole tone of the talk of the evening, the general attitude displayed, was not expressive of a proper sense of the true relations between our civic representatives and officials and the people whose servants they are.

The outstanding feature was the prominence given to "kicking" on the part of the ratepayers or the general public. The whole tenor of the remarks were to the effect that any criticism of the actions of the aldermen or officials was "kicking."

The aldermen and officials are unduly sensitive on this point. One cannot properly use the classical word "kicking" to fairly apply in respect of an employer anxious to get the best value of the work of his men and the money expended, who points out the bad character of work done and insists on improvement. He has a right to do this; it is his duty to himself. "Kicking" in all cases may not be criticism; and "criticism" when justified and called for is not "kicking."

When ratepayers, with constantly climbing taxes see things done on our streets and civic works, that mean a waste of money and unsatisfactory results, they are not, if they object, properly to be insulted with the title of "kickers." When we see the street trees of the city mutilated and improperly trimmed; when the ratepayers see companies and corporations, even the Utilities Commission treating street trees with scant respect, they are "kickers" if they object in either case.

Do the aldermen and city officials realize that they are the servants of the people, and that as such it is unbecoming to them to "talk back" to their employers?

Now in regard to the street trees there is a failure on the part of the aldermen and officials to see that they have not sole interest in them. They should recognize the fact that their arbitrary attitude towards our street tree interests, savours largely of impudence. The city hasn't planted one of the street trees over which they lord it so strongly.

The city engineer has been given the power of life and death over our trees; but just why a man already overworked should be given a responsibility that can only be discharged adequately by some body like a park commission, is not apparent. Here we have one man the sole arbiter, judge, jury and executioner, over an interest that concerns every one of the twenty odd thousands of our citizens. He can do as he likes with the property of the twenty thousand, and if a single citizen dares to cheep — to utter a word of protest over the improper treatment of trees that are a shelter and delight to every man, woman and child, he is a "kicker."

If the city took any real interest in our street trees which the public have planted; if it took as active steps to improve them as it does to remove them, there would be some justification of the air of proprietorship it assumes. The city has cut down scores of stately street trees of incalculable value, but it has not planted a single tree, nor is considering any steps towards street tree planting.

While the city assumes necessary authority over our street trees, it is only reasonable to ask that some decent deference should be paid to the interests and feelings of the citizens—with the city—the joint owners of all street trees.

It is not too much to ask that there should be some consultation in cases where there may be apparent conflict of interest; that the citizen who sees his interests in this regard menaced, should not be subject to insult if he objects.

The matter with a little mutual give and take could be managed more smoothly, and some decent attention paid to the rights and feelings of citizens.

One alderman at the meeting referred to, doubted that a city employee had told a lady who sought to protect her trees to 'go into the house." This is easily possible. City employees are not always models of courtesy in dealing with citizens. There is known a case where a city employee told a citizen to "go to hell," when he failed to meet the argument of the citizen in support of his claim to be given civic employment.

Yet this citizen so insulted was superior in education and culture to the man that gratuitously insulted one of his employers, one of the men who helped pay his salary.

This is not mentioned as a "kick," but to show that there is a possibility of a better understanding, between the aldermen and city officials and citizens as to the latter's claims to decent if not deferential consideration.

It is impossible to administer public affairs without incurring criticism, especially if much ground for objection is created. But there is a possibility of discriminating—there should be some mutual attempt to get together, to reconcile divergent points of view. In this event things would run more smoothly, better results would be reached.

The aldermen and the city officials do not own the city. It is owned by the citizens; and if they cannot have their business managed at all times to their liking, they, as the paymasters, have a right to something like considerate treatment, and respect for their rights.

TO "MEN ONLY."

On Sunday we had an address in the Royal Theatre to "men only." On Saturday evening we had addresses in Central Park to "men only"—the results will prove whether they were directed to "men only"—to real men or to "little Canadians." Whether in this latter case the addresses were to men only will depend upon whether those to whom the addresses were directed were real men; men with a sense of the duty of the highest citizenship; men with a sense of duty to their nation and country; men with a sense of the obligations of true citizenship; men who are unwilling to take all—all the benefits of the civilization and freedom they enjoy without stint—and give nothing; men who are willing that others, no more obliged than they are to do it, fight while they rest at home at ease, accepting without a blush, the protection which they are in duty bound to give their share of.

It has been the practice of some Canadians to take on superior airs and disparage foreigners, and even our kinsmen from beyond the seas, and give them to understand that they are intruding "undesirables," compared with native-born Canadians. Yet we find these same "undesirables" at a time of test and crisis, showing a sense of duty and patriotism that many Canadians are not showing. These same "undesirables" have done more than their share in bringing credit to the name of Canada in this war. We are told by Sir John French that Canadians "saved the situation" at Langemarck. What proportion of native Canadians were in the ranks that fought to the bitter end in that struggle? It was very largely these same "undesirables" that "saved the situation," while thousands of Canadians were at home smugly taking the credit of the achievements of "Canadians" in the battle line. If many ouf our native-born Canadians were not as they show by their actions, or lack of action—were not mere "men only," but also men, the recruiting booths would would tell a different story. We Canadians must do better; we must do a little thinking, and if we analyze the situation with a personal interest in the matter, our duty will be so plain, will become so insistent, that we shall see it and follow its promptings. It is evident that the lack of prompt recruiting comes considerably from lack of thought. It cannot be due to cowardice. It cannot be due to disloyalty in heart and intention, though it is practical disloyalty. In effect every lacking volunteer, every ounce of strength that is withheld from the fighting forces, is indirectly an aid to the enemy; so that he that is capable of fighting and is not fighting for Canada and the Empire, is indirectly and in effect fighting against it—a pro-German, if not in sentiment, then in effect.

THE WORK AND NEEDS OF THE NATIONAL SERVICE COMMITTEE

At the outbreak of the war all the prominent women's organizations united in one for patriotic purposes. A central committee was appointed with Mrs. Gooderham, the wife of Col. Gooderham of Toronto, as President, and Mrs. A. M. Pompre as Secretary. The National Service Committee saw its opportunity in a department of service which fell outside the province of the Militia Dept. and of the Red Cross. It took upon itself the task of supplying "Field Comforts for the troops at the front."

The term "Field Comforts" should by no means suggest the idea that the soldier is being coddled or being supplied with luxuries that are inconsistent with the highest military efficiency. On the contrary these so-called comforts are in really strict necessaries. They consist of articles of clothing such as socks, toques, handkerchiefs, etc., toilet articles such as carbolic soap, toothbrushes, insect powder, articles of food. In addition the soldier is supplied with tobacco, footballs, baseballs, and other amusement material.

The officers commanding Canadian Military Units in France are loud in their praise of the work being done by the National Service Committee allied with the Canadian War Contingent Association in England. Their only regret is that the goods being forwarded are not sufficient in quantity to meet the soldiers' needs. For instance one Canadian Captain writes to Mr. J. G. Colmer the London Secretary of the National Service Committee as follows:

"From your recent shipment I was able to give each man of my unit either cigarettes or tobacco. As you state your funds will not always permit you to send something for every man, but if you could see the disappointed faces of those who fail to get a present you would understand how hard it is for the person who has the thankless task of distributing the presents. The men often grumble in their disappointment that no one can get anything unless he has a pull with the Quartermaster. So you can see the delicate position we officers are in. For instance a few days ago I received from you some twenty pipes. I put them in my pocket and went out amongst the boys and tried to slip one out to a man who was in need of one. Before I had gone very far I was surrounded on all sides, and soon got rid of all my pipes and had to leave forty hands empty."

From this it is clear that there is a great need of further contributions. It should be both a duty and pleasure for the Canadian public to see that their troops are supplied with everything needed for their comfort. There should be no empty hands in our Canadian contingents.

So far over 15,000 cases of Red Cross and other hospital supplies for the sick and wounded have been [illegible] from Canada [illegible] for the men who are [illegible] It is natural of course that the sick and wounded should arouse sympathy but the soldiers on active duty should not thereby be neglected.

A second winter campaign seems at present inevitable. It will result in great hardship and distress to the men in the trenches.

We shall have a much larger number of men at the front than last winter and there is an urgent necessity for an increased contribution of "Field Comforts." We can perform no more patriotic service than that of keeping our soldiers in fighting trim.

Field comforts or money to purchase them can be given to the National Service Committee, through any Red Cross branch or through the Central Shipping Department at 77 Issabella Street, East, Toronto.

Field Comforts For Soldiers.

Military success demands three classes of material which may be styled respectively, munitions of war, munitions of healing, and munitions of comfort. The first class, guns, ammunition and so forth, the endless apparatus of hell operations, it is the primary business of the government to supply. Munitions of healing come within the province of the Army Medical Corps and the Red Cross. Munitions of Comfort for the men fighting at the front are being supplied by a great number of organizations, the Daughters of the Empire, the Women's Patriotic Institutes, the Western Homemakers Clubs, which act as collecting agencies for the Canadian National Field Comforts Organization, the National Service Committee.

Certainly every citizen who feels it a duty to support his country in this time of peril should furnish some at least of these three classes of munitions. For the most of us, it is a question of what we can best help comforts, which consist of socks, soap, towels, tobacco, playing cards, razors, and a host of other things which should be called necessaries rather than comforts, for they are indispensable to civilized Canadians. Our men cannot give efficient service if they are forced to revert to barbaric conditions of life.

Some may think it ridiculous that they can give military assistance to their country by the present of towels or razors or tobacco, but it is far from being so. Every item that keeps a soldier in cheerful spirits adds to his military value. The attention of the civilian population to the soldiers comfort will be an important factor in the ultimate victory.

Every patriot then should give willingly and generously to the societies which are collecting field comforts for the National Service committee.

FRANCE'S DEBT TO OUR NAVY.

What would have happened if Great Britain had remained neutral? When we see our coast line free from all attack, our ships traversing the oceans in all security and our colonies remaining attached to the Motherland, one can only recognize British naval power in its effects.—Le Temps, Paris.

PEACE OUT OF THE QUESTION.

In the present temper of the Allies peace is out of the question. For the lasting good of Germany it might well be doubted whether a peace concluded now would be a boon. The supreme need of Germany is to rid herself of Prussian militarism, of the imperial rule. There are hopeful signs that her people, in increasing numbers, see and feel the truth, but an immediate peace would leave the German people wearing all their fetters, become more galling than ever. The imperial and militaristic spirit would be quotepeople in its arrogance. The thrall would be unbreakable, and the German people, deluded by the exultant feeling of victory, would be less inclined than ever to attempt to break it.—New York Sun.

SIR WILFRID'S RECRUITING SPEECHES.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was Premier of Canada, he once announced in proclaiming his wholesouled loyalty to the British Empire, that if the need arose for giving assistance to Britain in war he would stump the country for recruits. In Opposition he is carrying out that promise. He is giving undivided support to a Government of a different political complexion in all their war plans for assisting the Empire. He is travelling around the country proclaiming the justice of the Empire's cause, and appealing to our young manhood to enlist for active service. "If I were a young man, I should feel it my duty to shoulder a rifle and fight for the Liberty of this and other lands," he declares. No man in Canada is prouder of his British citizenship than Sir Wilfrid, no man more ready to fight for the liberty which is the birthright of every Britisher.

Canada is affording the British Empire remarkable support both physically and morally in this war. That remarkable support is made possible by the spontaneous and unstinted help which the Liberal leader and the Liberal party heartily join in a solid phalanx are giving to the authorities in carrying out their military plans and in helping them to raise the necessary troops. With the Conservative leader in England declaring that Canada is with the Empire to the end in this war and with the Liberal leader in Canada eloquently voicing the righteousness of the British cause and appealing for recruits, it must be patent to all that there is no reservation whatever in Canada's loyalty.—Montreal Telegraph-Herald.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

Treatment of the Civilian Population, (A) Killing of Non-Combatants.

The Killing of civilians in Belgium has been already described sufficiently. Outrages on the German population of the invaded districts, the burning of villages, the shooting of innocent inhabitants and the taking of hostages, pillage and destruction continued as the German armies passed onwards. The story of the Sack of Andenne is referred to elsewhere, and the shooting of the Burgomaster and the leading citizens of Dinant after the had passed the French frontier as well as when they were in Belgian territory.

A proclamation (a specimen of which was produced) to the effect that a number of hostages had been taken and placed over the town affords a clear illustration of the methods adopted by the German Headquarters Staff. The proclamation runs:—

"In consequence of the shots which were fired on the German troops in the town of ——, all the hostages taken from the city on the 24th inst. will be shot, and the proclamation made hitherto shall be strictly carried out."

The evidence, however, submitted to the Commission with regard to the events that occurred in the German invasion of France and Belgium during the first month or two of the war, and to the methods of warfare employed by the German troops in that country, is of a character which cannot be adequately dealt with in a short report. The Commission has therefore decided to publish at the present time only a selection from the evidence which has been taken, and to postpone the consideration of the remainder until after the conclusion of the war. The evidence which is published relates to the conduct of the German troops during the first month of the campaign, that is to say, during the period between the declaration of war by Germany on August 4, 1914, and the occupation of Brussels by the German troops on September 2, 1914. FORTY HARVESTS IN ONTARIO THIS YEAR'S STILL IN PERIL

A Record of Adverse Weather Conditions Our Farmers Have Faced—Recent Rains Have Sprouted Large Percentage of Ontario's Greatest Wheat Crop—How Other Crops Stand

(By Rex Roy in the Weekly Star.)

Three weeks ago the farmers had the brightest prospects of any year in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. Today, with 30 per cent. of the wheat sprouted, the barley and oats in the balance, conditions have changed very much for the worse.

Good cultivation, clean seed, proper rotation and fertilization, are all important, but favourable weather counts for more than all combined. We give a summary of adverse weather conditions during the last forty years:

1875—6 were both ordinary years, good weather and big crops.

1878—Seeding started on April 1, was well advanced by April 28. It started to rain on a Sunday and rained for three weeks. Early sown grain was a good crop; that sown after rain was worthless. Burning, dry weather followed the long wet spell, and the ground cracked open. Haying was progressing well when on July 3 a terrible storm came, and acres of hay were flooded down to Lake Ontario. Then a wet spell came in wheat harvest, sprouting most of the wheat. The general election was on September 9th that fall, when Sir John A. Macdonald came to the country with the National Policy. A terrible storm came on September 5th, clearing all the dams and bridges from the Credit River from Cheltenham to Port Credit. Old-timers speak of this as the flood that swept away the McKenzie Government.

Wheat Too Soft to Sell.

Wheat that fall was too soft for sale. One day is still spoken of in Oakville when the grain buyers—McDougal, Johnston and Wales, refused to buy a single load of wheat, advising the farmers to go to Wareup's mill. He also refused, and up the seventh line there drove a procession of disconsolate farmers with loads of wheat no one would buy. This wheat was sold in the winter for 65 cents per bushel.

In 1879-80 there were good crops and favourable weather.

1881—Good crops, wheat $1.50, barley 98, finest fall on record. Serious fires occurred along railway tracks.

1882—A wet spell at end of harvest, did not do any serious damage.

1885—Very wet in wheat harvest; slight damage from sprouting.

1886—A very wet spring.

1887-88-89—All saw good harvest weather.

A Prophecy That Failed.

In 1890 a general Provincial election took place on June 6. There was a terrific rain on the night of June 5, and there were prophecies that Mowat would be downed like McKenzie. These did not come true, however. Hot, dry weather immediately after made a poor harvest.

1891—2—3—were ordinary years.

In 1894 there was a wet spring. One week in May the farmers claimed they did not see the sun for a week. There was a poor harvest.

In 1895 there was an early warm spring, and consequent wonderful growth. A frost on May 12 ruined the grass, making the worst year in the memory of the oldest inhabitants. A dry summer followed, with very little grass. Hundreds of cattle in Ontario died the following winter from starvation.

1896 saw ordinary weather; good crops.

Rain Spoiled Fine Crops.

In 1897 there were the best crops for years. Wheat and alsike were especially good. A hot spell in harvest ruined most of the alsike, and wheat was badly sprouted. Some was not cut as it was sprouted so badly that green blades could be seen all over the fields in passing.

The years 1898 and 1899 were very dry.

In 1900 there were splendid crops, but it was very wet in oat harvest, and considerable damage was done.

1901 saw a wet spring, but good harvest weather.

In 1902 there was a very early spring; plowing began on March 17, and most of the seeding was done by March 28.

In 1903 there were good crops, but it was very wet at the end of harvest.

There was a very wet spring in 1904, and little seeding was done until May. There were heavy rains in harvest time.

1905 and 1906 saw good crops and favourable weather.

There was in 1907 a cold backward spring, with poor hay and grass crops.

The year 1908 had a very wet spring, with poor spring crops.

In 1909 and 1910 there were good crops and weather.

The summer of 1911 was very dry, with poor pasture and light hay.

Oats Completely Destroyed.

Good crops promised in 1912, but abominable weather came along in the oat harvest. Hundreds of acres were completely destroyed. September and October were both very wet months. The farmers claim that the worst job they ever had was plunging through the mud to haul the corn to the silo.

1913 was a good year, nice harvest weather.

1914 also saw good crops and good weather.

This year promised the largest and best crop in the history of the Province, but by August 12th, owing to heavy rains thirty per cent of the wheat sprouted, and fifty per cent of the crop was still in the fields. Barley dead ripe, about ten per cent. ground too wet to run binders on. Loss bound to be heavy. The oat crop is ripe, and little damaged if crop could be cut in a few days. The heavy rain of Thursday, however, makes a serious problem, and another week of rainy weather would practically mean the loss of the crop. Corn has recovered splendidly from the recent storm and is growing well. Potatoes on clay are beginning to rot.

GREAT HISTORY OF BLACK WATCH

In 1760 there were 19 Highland Regiments in Montreal. They were the two battalions of the Black Watch, veterans who had been fighting in the West Indies for two years, and had followed the fortunes of the British in the war against the French, which culminated in the surrender of Montreal.

Over 150 years have passed, and again, in 1915, there will have been two battalions of the Black Watch in Montreal. The regimental numbers of the original units were 42nd and 73rd. A few years ago, after all this stretch of time, another 42nd formed in Montreal, and sailed away to undergo baptism of fire not far from where the original 42nd first saw action in 1743 in Flanders. Now a second battalion, the 73rd is to be formed, and after a time it will cross the seas to uphold those glorious and mighty traditions, the honour and the fighting fame of the ancient Black Watch.

It is not a coincidence that makes the numbers of these battalions the same as those of the Black Watch regiments. The 5th Royal Highlanders of Canada are affiliated with the Black Watch. The 73rd Battalion, the first active service unit to be sent abroad by the 5th, wears the tartan of the Black Watch. When the second overseas battalion from the Scots was formed it was given the number 42nd, because that was the old regimental number of the Royal Black Watch, given it in 1749. The call has now been made for a third active service battalion from the 5th Royal Highlanders. The new battalion will bear the number 73rd, a regimental number that shines in almost every epoch-making military event in the history of the Empire since the middle of the eighteenth century.

Original Regiment.

The original Black Watch Regiment was formed early in the eighteenth century, following an Act of Parliament which forbade anyone to carry arms. A number of Highland chieftains were commissioned to raise independent companies to keep order in their different districts. This was in 1725. In those days to go without arms, for a Highlander, was more or less of a disgrace and the young men of the time greatly availed themselves of engaging in a profession which relieved them from the sense of degradation and dishonour attached to the idea of being disarmed.

Each of these companies wore the tartan of his company commander. Most of these consisted of the dark green, blue or black tartan, and they were called colloquially "Dubh" or Black to distinguish them from the famous "Redcoats" of the British Army. Fourteen years after the formation of these companies they were formed into a regiment by George II., and were given the number "43."

John, the twentieth Earl of Crawford, was the colonel, and for some years before the regiment was employed on detachment duties in the Highlands. Then came the first call for foreign service. In 1743 the Black Watch sailed from England for France, and for two years was stationed in different parts of the country. According to the chronicles of those days: "This regiment was regarded as a trustworthy guard of property. Seldom were any of the men drunk, and they seldom swore."

Baptism of Fire.

In 1745 the regiment received its baptism of fire at Fontenoy. The responsibility of covering the retreat of the British after this battle was entrusted to the regiment, and it earned the praise of Lord Crawford, who said that it has acquired as much honour as if it had gained the battle.

The next year the regiment sailed for America, but was driven back by storms. Then it went to Ireland and in 1749 the number was changed to 42nd. In 1756 the Black Watch sailed for America, and for a year fought Indians. In 1758 it won great glory at Ticonderoga, where it lost half of its number in killed and wounded. In the same year the title "Royal" was conferred on the regiment and a second battalion, known as the 73rd was raised.

After flannels have been washed on no account allow them to be about wet. This will shrink them at once. They should be dried as soon as possible, preferably in a high wind.

FIRST CHAPLAIN TO BE KILLED IN THE PRESENT WAR

Was Mortally Wounded While Attempting To Rescue Wounded Soldiers During The Landing on The Gallipoli Peninsula—His Last Words

An appreciation by the Rev. H. Cocker, Church of England Chaplain to Second R. N. Brigade:

As I had the privilege and good time to be with Father Finn on the same transport and during his last days on earth, I daresay a few words from me would not be unwelcome at the time. Father Finn's name will be held in honour and revered by Christian people all over the world, but I venture to say, especially by the clergy and laity of his own Church. His blameless character and the geniality of his disposition endeared him to all who came in contact with him. To see him quietly at work among his own men of the Dublin Fusiliers (First Batty) gave one the clue as to why this courageous priest was so respected and beloved. He always had a sympathetic ear for the trials, temptations, difficulties and troubles of his men, and when they were depressed, and tired of the somewhat monotonous life on board a transport, he was ready with an amusing tale or a cheery word, so much so that among his own little inner circle of Irish "Tommies" he was known as "Father O'Flynn." Although I never heard his addresses at Mass yet I know how they helped his men to live purer and better lives. He called them his "Few Words," and one thing is certain they will not be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to hear them delivered. Many of his later addresses, he told me, were on the object of Contrition, and he taught all his men a little Act of Contrition to use when they required it, and he asked them especially to repeat it if they were wounded and no priest was nigh. "O my God, I am sorry that I have sinned against Thee, because Thou art so good, and I will not sin again."

It was on Thursday, April 8th, that H. M. Transport "Au-sonia" sailed from Alexandria for Lemnos Harbour which was filled with transports for conveying troops to Gallipoli Peninsula. Many a pleasant talk have I had with Father Finn, pacing up and down the deck, and I remember that the topics we discussed were many and varied, and included the Oxford Movement, Cardinal Newman, Pusey, the Cowley Fathers, and our future Lindisfarne on a hostile shore. His sympathy and kindness to me I shall never forget; he was broad-minded, and always thought of others. He celebrated Mass on the fore well-deck beneath a big tarpaulin, and always had an excellent attendance. He places this at my disposal for my own service at 7 a.m. on Sunday mornings, and did everything in his power to help me.

His last Mass was on Saturday morning, April 24, and was attended by a large congregation of his beloved Dublin Fusiliers. Our ship lay off Tenedos, surrounded by the warships of the Grand Fleet, which were getting ready for the great bombardment early next morning. His last words to the men were on "Preparation for Death," and little did his hearers think that the speaker himself was to "lay down his life for his friends" before another day had passed.

We had been close friends throughout the voyage and it was with great regret that I bid him "God-speed" on that Saturday evening, when we separated and got on two smaller ships which were to convey us, with the men, to Gallipoli. We steamed with lights out, he on an old collier (the S.S. "River Clyde"), and I on No. 1 mines-sweeper. About 3 o'clock we lay off the Peninsula, and at dawn commenced the great bombardment. This over, his ship was quickly run ashore, the Turks hardly firing a shot at her, on "V" Beach, close to Seddel-Bahr, whereas our men were taken ashore in small ships' boats towed by steam pinnaces, in charge of midshipmen. The latter method of landing proved to be the better, for immediately the men commenced to disembark from the "River Clyde" shells crashed into her from the shore, and machine-guns, many in number, were turned on the two exits made in her sides from which the men were emerging. Many of the gallant Dublins fell wounded and bleeding into the water, and when Father Finn saw it, he jumped in, and tried his utmost to rescue them. He succeeded in assisting several men, but suddenly several bullets entered his own body, and he fell just at the water's edge. It was seen at once that his condition was serious, and he was carried by some of the men to whom he had ministered so faithfully into a place under cover. He only lived a few minutes, and his servant knelt by his side. His last words are said to have been: "Are our fellows winning?" And then, amidst the thunder of the gun on sea and land he passed.

Thus died the first chaplain to be killed in action in the present war. His life and death are examples for all to follow. I took his photograph only a few days before his death, and then afterwards I took a photo of his grave, and when I return I hope to send copies of each to the press. Father Finn's memory will never fade. He gave his life for his country, and "Greater love hath no man than this."

Enemy Piled Up His Dead Using Bodies as Barricades

LONDON, August 5. A correspondent of the Morning Post at British headquarters in a despatch describes the recapture of the lost British trenches at Hooge which appears to have been most capably and creditably accomplished. Officers and men alike, says the correspondent, bear enthusiastic testimony to the accuracy and efficiency of the British artillery fire. The Germans undoubtedly were taken by surprise, says the correspondent, and were almost awaiting comfortably in their dugouts the bombardment to cease.

The attack was upon them before they knew it, and that the bombardment was off. In one of the dugouts a bewildered German in good rimmed spectacles was found so absorbed in a work of philosophy that he had apparently forgotten that a battle was going on.

The German officers barricaded themselves in their dugouts and declined to surrender. Sentries had to be torn from the posts of the dugouts and bombs dropped in from above. One by one the dugouts and their occupants were blown to pieces and the fight pressed forward out of the redoubt to the north west and along a trench which descried from it over the crest of the hill.

It was not intended to extend our line far along this trench but it was not possible to restrain the men. The trench was very deep and so narrow that the bayonet could not be used, and as the work had to be done by bombing. The enemy who escaped from the redoubt had retired down this trench, offering a desperate resistance and contesting every traverse.

"We had to sweep at that moment not only our own bombs but a considerable number of the enemy's, and we fought him back foot by foot, literally with his own weapons. The slaughter on the trench was very heavy but the Germans suffered far more than we, and as our men forced them back the bottom of the trench was so filled with dead and dying that the Germans were raised up on the bodies of their own men, and in consequence had to fight in a standing position."

BARRICADES OF DEAD.

The Germans to ward off the attacks, piled up a barricade of their dead to act as a traverse. Our men pushing forward got to a point in the slope where they could see a crowd of Germans in the hollow below. Unable to reach them by any means themselves they communicated the fact to the guns, and a salvo of shrapnel swept them out of existence.

Meanwhile on the right of the redoubt a trench had been carried as far as an old crater which was filled with Germans, apparently waiting to receive. Their position when our men gained the lip of the crater was hopeless. They were most anxious to come out and surrender, clambering up the sides in order to yield themselves. The bulk of the prisoners taken came from this spot. Unfortunately, it happened when marching to the rear one of the enemy's shells killed a number of them as well as some of their escort."

FALSE TEETH ON THE FARM

Oklahoma Woman's Naive Request to Secretary of Treasury

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Now that the Secretary of the Treasury has received a letter from a farmer's wife in Oklahoma he knows more about what is needed for life on a farm than he did.

"If you will send me $1,000," the letter ran, "I can purchase two cows, an automobile and a set of false teeth all of which articles are absolutely essential to farm life."

The writer figured that if the $1,000 for her should be taken from the $10,000 sent to the Secretary of the Treasurer recently by a resident of New York City as conscience balm, the false teeth and other agricultural essentials wouldn't cost the Government or any one except an unidentified conscience anything.

Judgment For The Plaintiff

Wages Dispute Was Heard in Police Court This Morning

Salvadore Lombroni was plaintiff in an action to recover the sum of six dollars, alleged to be due as wages from Nicholas Douros, proprietor of the Boston Cafe. The case, which was heard this morning before Police Magistrate Dumble, resulted in plaintiff obtaining judgment for six dollars and costs, amounting in all to eight dollars and sixty cents. Defendant claimed that one week's wages was withheld as per contract and that plaintiff left his employ without giving proper notice. Plaintiff gave notice on the night of July 31st and agreed to work one week longer in accordance with the agreement said to have been consummated between the litigants. According to the evidence he stayed a couple of days longer and then relinquished his position on account of illness. Magistrate Dumble construed this as indicative of the plaintiff's intention to remain the full week had he not been prevented through illness.

Mr. Nicholas Minnecola acted as interpreter. Mr. Widdifield acted for the defendant.

American Red Cross Stranded

May Have to withdraw From European Centre Because of Lack of Funds

American Red Cross doctors and nurses will be withdrawn from the battlefields of Europe on Oct. 1 because of a lack of funds to keep them there longer, according to a statement made last week at Washington by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the Red Cross Relief Commission. It is possible that the two units in Belgium, where the greatest need exists, will be continued, but the other fourteen detachments will be recalled on the date mentioned, when the American fund of $1,500,000 will be exhausted. THE CALL TO ARMS not true to say that he lacks in courage, energy and good will. What then is lacking? Nothing but to decide that all Canadians who are acceptable will go to the front. We must say the word. It is too terrible a thing to contemplate that we would accept the fruits of victory without striving to share in gathering them. Canadians are not built that way. It is still more terrible to think that by failing to do our part we may help the enemy.

Every Man Should Go.

Every man who should go and does not go is helping the Germans to overthrow the British Empire and is helping the Germans to destroy that freedom which every schoolboy knows has been bought by centuries of blood and suffering. Can we stand idly by under the [illegible] Can we see the battle-[illegible] marching to defend all we hold dear, our wives, children, mothers and sisters, all that we hold most dear and not feel that the best of us who can be accepted must go, too. If we hold back because we do not believe that a grave danger threatens it is invalid. What do we find? Just as Attila overran Europe and led his Huns to the very brink of victory over the world, just as the ancient Germans destroyed the great Roman Empire, so do we find the face of Europe in danger of being changed to-day. The Germanic theory of life is that of a military nation under an absolute leader. Do we hesitate because we think it impossible for the Germans to win? If we do we are grossly ignorant of history. If not, then do we propose to yield? It has been said by an American journalist that Canada is the backwash of the world and that an appreciation of our value of our [illegible] too much to expect of Canadians. I do not believe that their view must [illegible] it is necessary that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's saw be lived up to. Sherbrooke on Thursday. The waters of freedom we have to [illegible] for. Are we not even willing to [illegible] Those people who are really in favour of peace will endorse every effort to crush the turbulent [illegible] of it."

Private Arthur Noble.

Private Arthur Noble was given an enthusiastic reception upon being introduced by the Chairman. He endorsed the remarks of the previous speaker, and urged all those who were able, to rally to the support of the Empire. Private Noble suffered the loss of an eye during a severe engagement at Festubert, where many gallant soldiers lost their lives.

Lieut.-Col. Stevenson.

"It is a hundred years or more since the motherland has been so involved in the throes of war to such an extent as she is to-day," said Lieut.-Col. Stevenson, upon rising to speak. He paid a glowing tribute to the British Navy and the part it had taken in the present crisis. This was a phase of the present war that is apt to be underestimated. Its effectiveness was more than patent to the enemy and would remain so until success attended the armies on land, in their efforts to suppress German militarism. "The call has come over the seas," said the speaker. "The duty of every man is to assist in the preservation of the heritage which has been handed down to us from the ages, in the form of liberty and justice. Lieut.-Col. Stevenson closed with a stirring appeal to the young men who were present, to answer the call that has been extended to them, and share in the privilege of fighting for a cause which is not only just but necessary, if we are to enjoy the freedom which we have so long enjoyed and which was handed down to us by our forefathers who fought for it as we are asked to fight for it to-day.

Rev. F. Battersby.

The Rev. F. Battersby related an incident concerning a man whom he overheard remark that "they would not get him to go." He characterized such an individual as one unworthy of a place within the British Empire. He would ostracize him to the land of the Huns. In defining patriotism, the speaker said that true patriotism was not represented by patriotic utterances or loose contortes of patriotic music, but rather by the amount of sacrifice that was involved.

"The British Empire is experiencing an hour," said the speaker. "To-day we find ourselves face to face with a situation so vital that it demands all that true patriotism stands for. If we are going to respect the charge committed to us as a nation, then true patriotism demands three things, namely, endurance, obedience and self-sacrifice. If we would prefer God, liberty and freedom, to the Huns and slavery, then let us make up our minds to make the sacrifice, to stand as an Empire united, calm and resolute, and do our duty in the face of all things."

This Lady Has The Right Spirit of Patriotism

A lady residing on Water Street, of limited means, but possessing a fine spirit of patriotism, called at the Examiner Office this afternoon and left a splendid donation for the 59th Battalion regimental fund, and also some money for the tobacco fund. She was anxious to do what she could, she said, but was afraid it wasn't very much. However, when she handed the reporter the bill, he was of quite a different opinion.

"HIKE" TO NASSAU BY THE BOYS OF THE PLAYGROUND

The playground at Central school continuing its plan of holding frequent excursions during the hot season, held two "hikes" last week. The boys and their director went up towards Nassau, to the best swimming hole in the canal. All the games of the playground were played and there was swimming, diving and other water sports. Some fishing enthusiasts had taken their poles and amused themselves at their favourite sport.

The girls and Miss Johnston went to Jackson Park on Saturday and spent a splendid afternoon at various activities. The water was fine and this gave a treat to the girls which they would have difficulty in enjoying together if it were not for these organized outings.

The programme of playground work this summer has been large and varied and the increasing attendance shows that the idea of supervised play is taking a firm hold in Peterborough.

Canada has long been known as the British granary of the Empire. Recently she has become famous also in other respects, as for instance in the enormous number of horses she has sent to the allies on the continent and the output of munitions of war. As a fruit growing country Canada is rapidly assuming a premier position. Of apple trees alone she has at the present time no fewer than 25,000,000 trees, capable of producing when fully grown 50,000,000 barrels of apples per annum.

WHY IRISHMEN FIGHT

A fine expression of loyalty and at the same time a sane and pithy bit of reasoning as to the motives impelling Irishmen to take up arms for the empire is contained in a letter from Maurice Healy, nephew of the noted Tim Healy, the Nationalist agitator and fiery parliamentarian of the old days, to a friend in New York. Healy, fighting as second lieutenant in the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, wrote: "We are all in this battle—Unionists and Nationalist. If England is beaten in this war, there will be no Ireland left to fight for. And yet I do not think we are in it for that reason. I am not. I am in it, and I think all Irishmen are in it, because we think it cowardly and criminal to stand by when an attempt is made to subvert all principles of liberty and honor, merely because our ancient enemy happens to be fighting on the right side."

"When our fellow-countrymen now in America left Ireland things were very different from what they are now. They have utterly failed to grasp what has happened in the last fifteen years. It seems to be of no import to them that every Irish leader to-day advises the Irish people that they must throw their lot in loyally with England if they wish to continue to exist at all, otherwise they are a set of slaves. Why do they think the Germans will treat them any better than they have treated the Belgians?"

"So I am trying to do my little part, a faltering soldier, a peaceful blood spiller; hating the whole thing, literally, not in the slang sense, like hell; fearing death and pain and discomfort, and trusting that God will deal with me as He thinks best, and will deal with my country as a gentle and loving Father. I am not fighting for the British Empire or for world power or for territorial expansion; but I hope that any sufferings allotted to me and the thousands like me will purchase for Ireland a term of peace and prosperity in which she will bind up her wounds and once again be happy."

THE KAISERS SNEER

The strained relations between the Queen of Italy and the Kaiserin no doubt had something to do with the hastening of Italy into the war. Victor Emmanuel's consort has never forgotten the sneer of the German Empress when she married Italy's King. The Kaiserin had set her heart upon securing him for one of her sisters, but Victor Emmanuel would have nothing to do with any German princess and married Princess Helene of Montenegro, to the Kaiserin's intense chagrin.

On the betrothal being announced, the Kaiser made one of his refined jokes to the effect that the Princess Helene's grandmother was but a street vagabond peddling chestnuts. The sneer delighted the Empress, who repeated it everywhere. In due time it reached the ears of the future Queen of Italy, and ever since the relations between the two courts, never very cordial, have been more or less strained.

A PERISCOPE RIFLE

The French adopted an idea combining the use of the periscope and the rifle so that a soldier could aim and fire at the enemy without exposing his head.

A good many housewives complain that silver teapots that are not constantly in use get "fusty." To prevent this place a lump of sugar in the pot before putting it away. This will absorb any moisture that there may be and quite prevent the disagreeable "fusty" taste. It is a very simple remedy but most effective.

Local Man Fined $50

Was Charged With Being Under The Influence of Liquor While in Charge of an Automobile

A fine of fifty dollars was imposed on a local man for being under the influence of liquor while in charge of an automobile. This is the minimum fine allowed by law. The offence occurred on Saturday last. The case was heard this morning before Magistrate Dunsbie.

News From Barriefield Camp

BARRIEFIELD, Aug. 14.—The 8th C.M.R. reached Napanee on Thursday evening at five o'clock and all were reported well. The trip to Napanee was without accident of any kind, and Lt.-Col. Munro reported all well, happy and delighted with the undertaking. The detachment of the 8th reached Belleville last night at five o'clock and were met on the way by the Mayor of Belleville and a number of citizens who escorted them to the exhibition grounds.

Thirty recruits for the 59th Battalion arrived in camp yesterday from Cobourg in charge of Lieut. W. J. Troop.

Major Medd is in command of the 8th C.M.R. in camp in the absence of Lt.-Col. Munro. Major Medd spends much time in reading military history, and great wars of the past have a fascination for him. He is a great admirer of General Lee, the southern general who led the Confederate forces in the rebellion of 1861-5.

The 59th Battalion are building a new canteen and it will be of the substantial frame type. It will be well stocked with all that the men can need, and it is expected that it will meet with liberal patronage.

The Royal Edward Carrying 1350 Troops is Submarined

Six Hundred Lives Are Believed To Have Been Saved

Royal Edward, Carrying Troops to Dardanelles Sunk in the Aegean Sea

Troops Aboard the Royal Edward Were Reinforcements for the 29th Division and for the Royal Army Medical Corps---Was Canadian Northern Liner.

Special Cable to The Examiner.

London, Aug. 17---The British Transport carrying troops to the Dardanelles was sunk in the Aegean Sea on Saturday. There were 1350 troops and 220 of a crew. Six hundred are reported saved.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The Royal Edward was submarined in the Aegean Sea Saturday, presumably while en route to the Dardanelles. Because of the fact that she is a large vessel it is believed that she carried several thousand troops, and that the loss of life was large.

1,350 TROOPS ABOARD.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—It is officially announced that there were 1,350 troops aboard the Royal Edward when sunk, and 220 of a crew. In all about 600 were saved. It has not been stated what troops were aboard.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR 29TH.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—An official statement just issued says that the troops aboard the Royal Edward consisted largely of "reinforcements for the 29th division at the Dardanelles, and for the Royal Army Medical Corps units."

WAS 11,117 TON STEEL STEAMSHIP.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Presumably the former Canadian Northern liner, "Royal Edward," registered at Toronto, Canada, was the vessel torpedoed. She was 11,117 ton steel triple screw steamer, owned by the Canadian Northern Steamship Co., and was commandeered by the British Government for use as a transport at the beginning of the war.

THE SECOND ONE LOST.

The Royal Edward was built in 1908 in Glasgow. She was 526 feet long and had a sixty foot beam. She was modernly built throughout, and equipped with wireless.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Although a million or more troops have been safely shipped across the submarine infested seas, since the war began this is only the second one lost by Great Britain. In an engagement on the Turkish Asia Minor Coast, several weeks ago, a small British transport was lost but without heavy losses of life, according to the Admiralty statement.

15 Submarines Made in States and Assembled in Canada Now Aid Allies

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 17.—An achievement of American industry became known here in the story of how the parts of fifteen submarines were constructed in the plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company, put together in shipyards at Montreal and how finally the fifteen submarines crossed the Atlantic under their own power and are now doing duty in the North Sea and in the Dardanelles.

All this was accomplished in a little more than four months from the time that the order for the submarines was given. The submarines are similar to the "H" boats in the United States Navy. The feat is largely attributed to the industry and enterprise of Mr. Charles M. Schwab, head of the Bethlehem Steel Company.

Incidentally it became known that Mr. William J. Bryan, as Secretary of State, was fully cognizant of the whole transaction and ruled that it involved no violation of neutrality. Mr. Bryan, however, did object to the company building submarines and sending them directly from United States ports on their warlike mission.

Some time ago reports filtered past the Canadian censor that German submarines were seen in the upper St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy. These reports grew out of the steaming of the American made submarines. Word of their successful crossing of the Atlantic has just reached here.

When Mr. Schwab got the order for these boats he came to Washington to consult Mr. Bryan about the matter. Mr. Bryan ruled against the proposal Mr. Schwab had in mind, namely, to build the boats and ship them directly. Mr. Schwab then did the next best thing. The steel plates and bars and tubes and heavy oil Diesel engines were manufactured at Bethlehem and shipped to Montreal. There they were put together, the plates being shaped and the mechanism being installed. When the boats left they were fully equipped with torpedoes. Trained submarine crews brought from England were aboard them.

The boats are 150 feet long and 15 feet wide. They have a surface displacement of 360 tons and 430 tons submerged. Their surface speed is fourteen and one-quarter knots, and their submerged speed ten knots. They were made after the designs of the Electric Boat Company.

It is known positively that some of the boats are now at the Dardanelles. Whether they have figured in any of the hostilities there is not known.

BREAD PUDDING
TO THE NEW HYMN OF HATE

Cranberry pie or apricot
We love them not we hate them not
Of all the victuals in pot or plate.
There's only one that we loathe and hate
We love a hundred we hate but one.
And that we hate for our race is run
Bread pudding!

It's known to you it's known to you all!
It casts a gloom and it casts a pall;
By whatso name they mark the mess,
You take one taste and you give one guess
Come let us stand on the waiting plate,
A row to register, face to face.

We've been large our hate
Of that tasteless fodder we execrate—
Bread pudding!

Cranberry pie or apricot
Some folks like 'em and some folks not
They're not so bad if there's made right
Though they don't overmuch our appetite,
But we've hate with a lasting hate
And never will we that hate abate
Hate of the tooth and hate of the gum,
Hate of the palate and hate of the tum,
Hate of the mutton who've choked it down
In country kitchen or house in town
We've a thousand we hate but one
With a hate more hot than the hate of Hun
Bread pudding!

Good Record By the C.P.R.

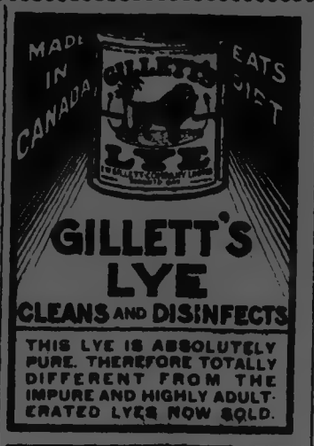
Most people know that the Canadian Pacific Railway traverses over eleven thousand miles of country in Canada, encounters even tropical and arctic weathers; cuts its way through the rugged and difficult country along the shores of Lake Superior; crosses the endless prairies of the west; and finally runs through the glories of the Canadian Rockies where the road in some places has been hewn out of the mountain sides under lowering peaks; through great canyons; and in other places tunnels and spiral rails have to be negotiated, all necessitating care in operation. But in spite of all these difficulties the Canadian Pacific has not killed a single passenger in a train accident during the past two years, which is a record Canada can place against the recent boast of the Pennsylvania Railroad not having killed a passenger in three years. Especially so when it is considered that the latter road has not the same climate conditions to face and the easy country through which it traverses.

A Young Girl's Room.

There is no pleasanter task for a young girl than to fix up her own room. If it must be bedroom and den combined it must be especially neat, because in most cases girlish visitors are ushered right in and expect to see an attractive, cosy room. A little cretonne drapery will do wonders toward making the barest of rooms home-like. This should be plain if the walls are figured, or figured if the walls are striped or merely bordered with flowers.

The latest fancy is to decorate the luncheon china to correspond with the embroidery pattern of the cover. The girl with a taste for china painting can decorate her own boxes, trays and brush backs, piece by piece, and if she cares to do so can use the same design for the cups and saucer and teapot on her tea table, copying the design for the cups and saucers and teapoddies and whatever covers she needs on her various dressing tables, chiffoniers and tables.

She might even add an embroidered pillow cushion or two to her window seat. To correspond she should use a design similar as possible to the wall paper or drapery. Of course, the large, splashy cretonne patterns could not be satisfactorily reproduced on chintz, even though the cretonne itself could be bordered with lace and used for covers, but a flower design from the mass on the cretonne could be used on the china if so desired.



GERMANS HAVE RESUMED DRIVE IN COURLAND

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The army under General von Buelow, operating west of the Dvinsk and south of Riga, apparently has overcome the Russian counter offensive. It has resumed its advance, and, according to yesterday's statement in Berlin, it has driven back the Russians from Kubisko and captured more than two thousand prisoners.

To the south before Kovno the Russians, according to the same source of information, made an unsuccessful sortie from Kovno, which the Germans are now approaching.

In the Polish sector the German armies are slowly drawing in their line and advancing from the northwest and south on Brest-Litovsk. While they continue to take comparatively small numbers of prisoners they make no mention of the capture of artillery or booty, which is considered by military observers as a fair indication that Grand Duke Nicholas' armies continue their orderly retreat and that for a long time to come they will be able to prevent the Germans from detaching any part of their army for large ventures elsewhere.

FRENCH AVIATORS ARE MASTERS OF THE GERMANS IN SKY BATTLES

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Aug. 17. Battles between French and German aviators have been quite frequent recently and in these encounters far above the earth the Frenchmen have distinguished themselves.

A French aeroplane was reconnoitring above Colmar on Thursday when a German aeroplane appeared out of the sky. In the ensuing combat the Frenchman poured a stream of shots from a machine gun on the German, forcing him to descend within the German lines in Alsace. The indications were that the German machine had been badly damaged and that the aviator had been wounded.

Two German aeroplanes on the same day tried to reconnoitre above the French lines in Artois. French aviators rose and the battle far above the trenches was so lively that the Germans were forced to retreat and descend. They were pursued at top speed a long distance.

In this neighbourhood a little later the same day two French patrols attacked another German aeroplane and apparently damaged it, as it was seen to volplane back of the German lines. Only the day before an Albatross machine was forced to the ground in the same manner.

So sharp is the watch kept for German air craft that they are attacked and driven back before they get far inside the French lines. This has given to Paris an added sense of safety from aerial attacks.

Perhaps the most important and exciting aerial battle recently was when a squadron of ten German aeroplanes, all carrying heavy bombs, attempted to attack Toul and Nancy on August 1.

French aeroplanes, warned of their approach, rose quickly and met the Germans. The machine guns of the flying craft popped like bunches of fire crackers. The pursuit was so desperate that to avoid being overhauled and dashed with their machines to the ground the Germans released all their bombs and they dropped upon open fields, doing no damage.

The ten Germans, several of them crippled, were pursued well back of the German lines before the French aviators were forced to abandon the chase.

By Scaling Treacherous Heights Italians Close In on Plezzo

Special Cable to The Examiner.

ROME, Aug. 17.—By scaling treacherous heights and taking the enemy's positions at the point of the bayonet, the Italians systematically closing in upon Plezzo. Despatches to-day said the bombardment of Plezzo forts has continued for 48 hours without interruption. The Austrians have made several attacks on the Carnia frontier in the last 48 hours but have been thrown back with heavy losses. These assaults were not renewed yesterday.

Artillery duels continue all along the Tyrolean frontier and in the Vale Apezzo region. Austrian trenches along Bonebach and Bachernach valleys were taken by infantry charges and held in the face of counter attacks.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

Well, it was gratifyin' to see Jim. His eye got red, his face got white, and I'm willin' to bet right then was the moment that he shed off his fool notions and made ready to take the world as he really was. M. had seen the bad side of Isaac Cox, was ashamed and now would be was stood up accusin' his own self and watched, he raved like a trapped wolf. But he wasn't dumb enough not to beat it with his fists and he wasn't warmin' any weapon at the time.

"Shut up," sez the man from Paris, "you can't make a monkey out of me."

"No," sez Jim, "you I can't make stone out of rock, but I can make powder out of rock by grindin' it up, and that's just what I intend to do with you."

"Perkins, is that clear?" sez the man from Paris, after he'd listened to this talk in helpless rage. "Perkins," sez he, "if you put one finger on Hopkins' name into that call, I'll, the'll won't be one of your crowd get back to tell how it happened. That ain't no fair way of fightin', and we won't stand for it."

They felt sure I wasn't armed, cause they had gone through me out on the porch, but truth to tell, I still had a little argument left in the gunholder under my arm. I stood in my corner with my arms folded and I looked at 'em easy and scornful.

Men-hunters get so they can read men the same as you fellers can read cows, and the three in that room saw that the change in me wasn't bluffin', though they couldn't quite savvy where I had any cards to stand on.

Perkins wasn't proud of his job for several reasons, one of which was the chance he stood of havin' his eyes shot out while leanin' over to drop in the straw. He had a bunch of straw in his left hand, a pile of straw at his feet and more straw in a bucket; his face was all puckered up and puzzled and he sure did look comical.

Madame had got silent by this time so I sez with a grin: "You'd better throw that straw down in the cellar for the calf to make a bed of, Perkins."

Perkins had large eyes and a face that hankered to be chubby and he sure did respond to a little rawhidin'. He knew in his heart that he looked foolish and felt foolish, and it seemed to him no matter what he did it was bound to be foolish, so he just stood there holdin' the straw like a lady's bouquet, and wishin' he was playin' some other kind of a game.

The Paris man was black with rage; one of his men was watchin' Jim, whose face was still flamin' with scorn and indignation, the other stood like a sick sheep in a heap of straw. Isaac was fidgettin' about like a shocked and outraged hen, and I was standin' in a corner with a grin on my face that insisted on gettin' broader even though I was so pissed up and worried that I expected somethin' to break loose with a crash at any minute. He wanted to shoot me, his mouth watered to shoot me; but he knew that the folks up our way had strong prejudices again' deputy marshals crowdin' in and shootin' a feller just because he held private views on the way the law should be enforced, and he wasn't quite sure in his own mind what my business had been when I rode away that evenin'.

We held our positions in silence for a moment and durin' this moment, I caught the voice of that imp of a Flames out on the back porch again. "There's four new fellers here," sez he, "and they're prowlin' after the Begum. Moody wants to know if he hadn't betetr take a shot at 'em. What shall I do?"

My face changed some, I knew, because the expression on the face of the man from Paris also changed as he watcher me; but my face didn't change near as much as would have been comfortable. I was now sure in my heart that Flames was the one who had started Moody and that he was doin' his best to get Moody to cut loose. Moody had pretty fair judgement, but Flames was a sly cuss, and if he could just get Moody to thinkin' that it was my orders, why, Moody could do more in one minute than all the rest of us could undo durin' the balance of our lives.

I thought rapid and decided to take a chance. So I looke dat the man from Paris with my brows drawn down and spoke right to him, but in a low tone, so that Flames would think it was him I was speakin' to. "Don't you issue any order without my permission," sez I, "or I'll skin you alive."

Well, the man from Paris part' nigh had a heart explosion. "You, you, you shut up!" sez he, wavin' his gun up and down. "You've interfered with me all you're ever goin' to. Light that grass, Perkins, and if that feller makes a crooked move, I'll kill him right now."

Perkins looked at me and I looked at Perkins, he drew a sulphur stick and rubbed it into a splutter while I opened my mouth as though about to holler and bent my knees as though about to spring. My arms were folded with my fingers gripped around the butt of the gun under my left arm, and the grin had left my face. "Perkins," I sez in a low voice as he still stood hesitatin', "there's men outside who will tend to your friend from Paris; but I'll tend to you myself; and if you throw any lighted straw into that cellar you'll find yourself in a hotter furnace 'n that two seconds later."

"Light the straw!" yelled the man from Paris.

Perkins still wavered, the match was burnin' close and he started to move it toward the straw, but a kept lookin' at me with something the same look in his eyes Connie had had when he came to make up with Sporty after havin' hit him in Isaac's defence.

I saw he intended to light it and had started to put a strain on my gun when there came a voice out of the cellar which brought everything up with a jerk. The voice was hysterical, high pitched, and of terrific volume. It was like the lettin'-go of the safety valve on a helper-locomotive when the Overland is a bit late, and it sure did put the kinks in a feller's backbone. "Stop, stop it all of you!" yelled the voice. "I can't stand it another minute; you're driving me insane! Somebody come down here and watch this calf, and somebody else come down here and fix this ladder. Why don't you hurry up? I'm beside myself with nervousness. Somebody hold a light."

Well, that voice was a face-changer sure enough; the eyes of those deputy men stuck out like lumps on a meatpie and their jaws dropped all limp and floppy like gates with the lower hinges busted. Jim was about as bad surprised as they were, but Isaac's face was the most fun. His face had filled me with joy ever since he had come up out of the cellar, but now he looked the guiltiest man in the world and as though he expected that hangin' was to be his final doom.

"What does this mean?" sez the Paris man to me.

"How do I know?" sez I. "If it was me who was bossin this job instead of you, I'd lower Mr. Foster into the cellar, he bein' the champion calf-wrangler of this outfit. I'd hold that lighted lantern so he could see, I'd send one of my own men down there to fix up the ladder and help the party up, and I'd ask my questions then."

"You go on down there yourself and fix up the ladder," sez he to me.

"Not me," sez I. "I'm under arrest, but I haven't been sentenced to hard labour yet."

"I'll go," sez Jim, and he lowered himself into the cellar, put up the ladder down which Isaac climbed to take charge of the calf, and the next moment, puffed and blown and disarrayed, the head of the Begum appeared above the floor. I stepped forward and helped her out and she sailed into the man from Paris immijit. "You're a perfect brute!" sez she. "I don't believe you're a law-officer at all. No law-officer would keep me in a dirty hole like that, drive a calf in on top of me, and threaten to smoke me out with wet straw and to kill anyone who interfered. You're a coward, that's what you are."

"I didn't put you down there," sez he, "and I didn't intend to smoke you out; but you'll find that you've got yourself into trouble before you're through with this."

He stepped to the door. "That was him in the woman's dress," sez he. "Round him up. He's got a gal here-abouts, so watch for two of 'em." Then he came up to me. "This is your doins'," sez he, "and you're in a tight box this time."

"What could I do, mister?" sez I as meek as a hen. "You took away my weapon and turned me loose in this house. What could I do in a desperate man put this poor woman in the cellar, dressed himself in one of her rigs, and forced me to sit still like a frightened lamb while he strolled out, right past you? I may look ridiculous at the trial, but I won't have nothin' on you."

He was frantic enough to suit anybody, and it's just possible he'd have done something rash if we hadn't heard a hoot o' yellin' and shootin' down towards the corral. At first I gave up all hope and then I recognized the voice o' Windy Jones offerin' up the howl which had won him his title and so I knew the jig wasn't up yet.

"Who is that?" sez the man from Paris to me.

"I'm sorry to disappoint ya aeron, pardner," sez I to him, as grave as possible, "but I can't just rightly say. We haven't issued any invitations so far as I know, so it may be the governor o' the state, or it may only be the Stern gang joined up with Big Jeff and Panther Emmons, and comin' to see if they approve the way you enforce the law."

(Beauty Notes)

Ugly hair growths can be removed in the privacy of your own home if you get a small package of delatone and and mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the hairy surface. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes, then removed, and the skin washed, and every trace of hair will have vanished. No harm or inconvenience can result from this treatment, but be sure you buy real delatone.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

DAFFY DANIEL

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mrs. Tweedy peered from the window.

Abner, her husband, had also heard the creak of wagon wheels.

"Who be it, Marthy?" he asked.

"Nobody but Daffy Daniel," she replied, resuming her mending.

"Humph!" muttered Abner. "Wish he'd sell me that south lot."

"He ought to be made to," agreed his wife. "Any one as simple as Daffy ought to have a guardeen. I should think you'd speak to the selectmen about it, Abner."

"I've a mind to," grumbled Abner.

"The lot don't do him any good," argued Mrs. Tweedy. "I've said for a long time that Daffy ain't got common sense."

Miss Blake, the new schoolteacher, who boarded at the Tweedys', looked up from her book.

"Why do they call him that?" she asked.

"Call who—what?" demanded Mrs. Tweedy, startled by the sudden question.

"Daffy Daniel."

"Oh! Because he is daffy."

"In what way especially?" insisted Frances Blake. She was a small, clear eyed woman, intrepid of speech and action. "Is he insane?"

"Land, no!" protested Mrs. Tweedy. "Daniel ain't really crazy, but he's simple minded. Folks have called him 'Daffy Daniel' ever since the fire at the Ford place. Daniel was only seventeen, and his pa and ma and his sister was burned to death. Daniel had been spending the night with his cousin at Overbrook. In the night he saw the flames and came running five miles. And when he reached home it was too late. There wan't any home or any folks left.

"He was sick for weeks afterward and since then he's always been queer. Some say he blames himself because he wasn't home that night. He said, 'If I'd been there I might have saved them.'"

"Poor fellow," murmured Miss Blake. "And where does he live now?"

"Built himself a cottage on the old cellar. He loves the farm like a leech, won't part with an inch of land, tho' Abner 'd like that south lot. It joins our prop'ty, you know."

"And so he is queer," went on Frances Blake. "Is he married?"

"Law, no! Wouldn't look at a girl. Awful queer!"

"Is he disagreeable?"

"No-o-o, not exactly," admitted Mrs. Tweedy. "He's very short in his manner, don't stop to talk with neighbors and reads most all the time. He's queer. He's downright daffy, Miss Blake. It all happened twenty years ago."

Miss Blake made no comment. She returned to her book, but for nearly an hour she did not turn a leaf.

Presently Mrs. Tweedy arose to prepare the evening meal. Abner got up and lighted the big reading lamp.

But Frances Blake had lost interest in her book. She got up and went bareheaded into the April sunset.

The garden was fragrant with the smell of growing things. The odor of earth was pleasant.

From the woods at the north came a vagrant breeze. It bore a whiff of sassafras and violets and new leaves and springing grass.

"Oh!" cried Frances Blake, throwing her arms to the rosy clouds. "I must breathe this before it goes away."

So she wandered down the back path, through the orchard where robins were calling in low thrilling tones, where insects chirruped in the grasses.

Out of the orchard she wandered into the rolling pastures. Once or twice she crossed a fence.

She heard the distant clamor of the Tweedys' supper bell and scorned it.

It was a magic world, bathed in a rosy light. Bird songs, flower life and smell of springtime. Frances closed her eyes and leaned against the fence.

"Are you sick?" asked a man's quiet voice.

Frances looked up, startled. She saw a tall, broad shouldered man in a rough gray suit. His cleanly cut features were bronzed with sun and weather. There was a boyish look about him in spite of his gravity. He had good brown eyes and white, even teeth.

"Thank you, I am quite well," said Frances. "I was only enjoying the evening. It is so beautiful."

"You like it too?" he asked eagerly. "I love it, but I don't dare mention those things. My neighbors believe one should take the beauties of nature as a matter of course."

"Like daily bread, and water, and turnips, I suppose," laughed Frances.

He nodded.

"But one is supposed to enjoy bread and turnips and be thankful for them. God made sunshine and flowers and birds, and why not be grateful for those too?"

"I am," said Miss Blake quietly. "And so should you."

"I am doubly so since I have discovered another one who thinks as I do. Listen."

From the orchard came the throbbing, haunting song of the first whippoorwill.

"I am Frances Blake, the new schoolteacher," she said impulsively. "Who are you?"

He took her hand in his and clasped it in a friendly way.

"I?" he repeated in an altered tone. "Why, they call me 'Daffy Daniel.'"

"Daffy Daniel!" Frances was startled. "How absurd of them! I meant your real name," she added.

"Daniel Ford," he said dazedly.

"Good night, Mr. Ford," said Frances. "Mrs. Tweedy is ringing the bell so desperately I must go."

He watched her cross the fields until she disappeared in the shadowy orchard.

That night Daffy Daniel startled Pond village folks by coming to prayer meeting, a place he had avoided for twenty years.

Perhaps he hoped the schoolteacher would be there. Perhaps it was a sudden whim. Anyway, old friends nodded at him, and women smiled, and the minister shook hands and called him "Mr. Ford."

Miss Blake did not go to prayer meeting. She sat alone in the sitting room and corrected exercises until the Tweedys came home from the church.

Mrs. Tweedy was filled with mild excitement.

"Daffy Daniel was at meeting!" she announced as she sank into a chair.

"Is that an unusual event?" smiled Miss Blake.

"Once in twenty years. Kinder unusual," remarked Abner dryly.

"It's queer!" ejaculated Mrs. Tweedy, and then she went on to tell about the forthcoming fair and carnival which was to be held in Firemen's hall.

"And the decorations are all crape paper and pink cheesecloth," ended Mrs. Tweedy. "Suppose it got afire?"

"That would be dreadful," shuddered Miss Blake as she went up to her room.

That night the schoolteacher dreamed that she attended the carnival in Firemen's hall and that suddenly the whole place was ablaze. Some one picked her up and bore her through fire and smoke to cool safety.

And she opened her eyes and saw that her heroic rescuer was Daffy Daniel.

"Why," she had said to him in wild surprise, "you are a man!"

And he had answered:

"A man asleep. You have awakened me."

She continued to think of Daniel Ford far more often than was necessary or required by mere pity for his lonely condition.

She knew now that many of his eccentricities were due to his habit of living alone with his grief. She knew that through systematic reading he had educated himself above his neighbors. Daffy Daniel was a gentleman and a scholar, and the attitude of his neighbors was incomprehensible.

* * * * * * * *

The night of the carnival!

Firemen's hall was a bower of beauty, according to the Pondpoint Bugle. "Flowers, festoons and fair femininity crowded the floors," it said enthusiastically before it went on to describe the tragedy that followed.

In the middle of the festivities some one cried "Fire!"

There was a stampede for the single exit, but a man impeded the way, a big man with arms stretched across the doorway, who cried authoritatively:

"One at a time, one at a time! Women and children first!"

The man was Daffy Daniel, who had not attended a festival in twenty years.

While the firemen threw a feeble stream on the flimsy wooden structure Daniel Ford kept the crowd from panic until there remained a mere handful of people, who, frightened at the volumes of smoke pouring up the stairs, declined to go and huddled near the windows.

Among these Frances Blake lingered, encouraging, soothing and helping one and another.

Then Daniel Ford suddenly broke loose upon them, grasped a woman in his arms and rushed down the burning stairs to safety.

Again and again he made the perilous journey, until the room was in flames and there remained only the schoolteacher, pale and calm.

"You?" he groaned. "I must save you!"

"You have saved twenty lives or more, Daniel Ford," she smiled at him.

"Thank God!" he said reverently, "those will atone for the lives I could not save twenty years ago."

As he spoke the burning stairs fell with a crash.

A cry of horror went up from the waiting crowd.

Daniel Ford caught Frances in his arms even as she had dreamed.

"There is one chance. Will you trust me?"

"Yes," she said.

A large window opened on the roof of the square entrance porch. The corner of the porch jutted against the trunk of a huge tree.

Daniel stepped from the window to the roof and swung himself among the branches of the tree, Frances held in one strong arm.

The crowd cheered wildly, and a hundred hands leaped up to help him as he slid down to the ground.

But he gave the girl to no other hands. He stood there, dazed. A scorched, blackened figure, with the fire of manhood in his eyes.

"Three cheers for Daniel Ford!" yelled his neighbors, and as they gave it he knew that with the acclaim were the love and admiration of his friends. Never again would they call him "Daffy Daniel."

Then the roof fell in, and as the crowd ran toward the building Frances looked up into Daniel's face.

"Ah!" she breathed. "You are a man and a hero!"

His face glowed.

"I am glad for your sake," he said, and their eyes met and understood.

IT WAS A GOOD PORTRAIT.

And It Had a Sobering Effect Upon "Hollering Jones."

A well known illustrator who makes interesting western pictures once made the acquaintance of a busy but good humored cowboy who rejoiced in the appellation of "Hollering Jones."

In physical appearance this man was typical of his kind, and the artist made several studies of him, both in repose and in his favorite diversion of "hollering." Some of the studies were sold by the artist to an eastern magazine. They showed Jones in his most violent state.

A year later the artist again visited the region. He was soon approached by Mr. Jones himself, bearing one of the pictures, which he had torn from the magazine in which it was printed. Pointing to it, he said:

"Is that me?"

"Well," replied the artist evasively, "I got the general idea from you, of course, but"—

"Oh, I ain't takin' no offense," Jones made haste to say. "It's all right; only if it's me say so."

"If you put it to me that way," said the artist, "I can only reply that it is a fairly good portrait of you."

"The men here on the ranch agree with you. So I look like that when I holler, do I?"

"I think you do."

"In that case," said Hollering Jones, "all I've got to say is that Hollering Jones has hollered his last holler. Hereafter, when I celebrates I does so with a tin horn. In my opinion no man has a right to look like that—not round white folks, anyhow."—Youth's Companion.

A Message To Thin, Weak, Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh.

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat on all kinds of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hold them over to the blood, where they form the starting elements of fat. Then the body is fed by the blood, and the fatty materials of which it is composed are increased. The thin person's body is filled out, the form rounds out, and he or she soon takes on healthy flesh.

Sargol is the name of a preparation which is meeting with success in these directions. It is a scientific combination of certain elements which are well known for their powers in creating healthful flesh, strength and energy. Sargol does not make fat directly, but it does supply to the blood the powerful assimilative agents which cause fat to be made from the nourishment contained in the food you eat. Sargol thus helps to make fat in exactly the way Nature makes it, and when you have gained the full amount of flesh you desire, Sargol will be found to have left behind it a permanent addition to your health and strength.

Sargol is sold by druggists everywhere at $1 per large case (or you can get it direct from the Sargol Laboratories, Buffalo, N.Y., if your druggist cannot supply you). It is inexpensive, easy to take, and absolutely harmless. Many druggists are now featuring Sargol and are authorized to refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight and energy it has produced. Sargol is sold in Peterborough by Geo. A. Chalmers, Druggist.

Caution: While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

DEATH FOR SWEARING.

Profanity In the Early Centuries Was a Capital Offense.

Relieving one's mind in a profane way used to be a costly proposition. In the ninth century Justinian punished swearing by death. By the statutes of Donald VI. and Kenneth II. the north Briton had the offending member cut out when the tongue ran riot, Philip II. of France ordered those guilty drowned in the Seine, and the council of Constantinople excommunicated any one that swore heathen oaths.

In 1551 a man could swear in Scotland for 12 pennies per cuss. The higher you were in rank the more you had to pay for the privilege of oaths. Perhaps it was figured that the common people should be given wholesale rates.

By an act of the sixth and seventh years of the reign of William and Mary servants, day laborers, common soldiers and common sailors were fined 1 shilling a swear; others were taxed 2 shillings. The swearing schedule in the household of Henry I. was 40 shillings fine for a swear word by a duke, 20 for a lord, 10 for a squire, 3s. 4d. for a yeoman and "a page to be whipt."

The law that provided fines for swearing led Jonathan Swift to his prospectus of the "bank of swearing" during the speculative craze at the time of the south sea bubble. This bank was to have a monopoly of collecting the fines of those who swore, and Swift said: "It is said there are 2,000,000 in the kingdom (Ireland), of which 1,000,000 are swearing souls. There are an estimated 5,000 gentlemen, and every gentleman can afford to swear one oath a day, which will produce 1,825,000 oaths a year, or 191,..."

In 1592 at Aberdeen the council naively told the head of the house to have a box placed for the collection of the fines imposed upon the household for swearing.—Chicago Tribune.

Acute Pleasure.

Wife (returning from matinee)—Oh it was too lovely! She had on a pale nile green silk, with bands of passementerie down the front and the grandest diamonds you ever saw, and when she died, in the last act, she rolled over four times, and every woman in the house was crying. I never enjoyed a play so much in my life.—Puck.

Her Nice Little Plan.

He—I don't believe your father will give his consent. I haven't got much, you know. She—That doesn't matter. The first month we can live on love, the second I'll begin to borrow things from mamma and about the third papa will get tired of it and come to the rescue.—London Telegraph.

Nice Neighbors.

"Tough neighborhood I live in. People steal everything I leave in my shed."

"Why don't you put a padlock on the door?"

"I put on a fine one, and somebody got it the first night."—Kansas City Journal.

An Important Point.

A city girl was taking a course in agricultural college. After a lecture on "How to Increase the Milk Flow" she rose for a question.

"How long," she blushingly inquired, 'must one beat a cow before she will give whipped cream?"—Judge.

TREES THAT ROB THE SEA.

Nipa Palms and Mangroves of Sarawak Are Land Builders.

The river banks in Sarawak (British protectorate in Borneo) are lined with nipa palms and mangroves. At low tide you can see the mangroves standing on trestles of black woody roots, looking like snakes writhing in the mud. Upon these pedestals crowns of bright green leaves thirty to forty feet in height form aquatic forests at the mouth of the rivers all along the coast. Each branch is weighed down by fruit, which when ripe drops into the mud and starts a new tree.

The nipa palm has matted roots, which easily retain the flotsam and jetsam carried down by the increasing current of the waters, and it has an angular fruit, which, like that of the mangrove, sinks into the mud, germinates and forms forests on its own account. The incessant action of these encroaching trees adds continually to the land. Indeed, there are certain aged natives who have been heard to say that part of the coast near Sirik, although exposed to the constant surf of the northeast monsoon, has encroached on the sea for two miles or more during their lifetime.

When the land reclaimed by the mangroves and nipa palms becomes drier the trees die and give place to other tropical vegetation.—From "Ranee of Sarawak" in Wide World Magazine.

Penalties of Fashions.

Men of fashion must have felt exquisitely uncomfortable in the days of beaver hats weighing ten times as much as the heaviest hats of today. Sir Algernon West remembers wearing about 1850 "a pair of dove colored trousers with two fluted stripes down the sides and buttoned under the foot with broad stripes of the same material, Wellington boots, which were sine qua non with a man of fashion in those days, and a coat so high in the collar that the back of the hat rested on it. Indeed, every hat had a crescent of cloth on the back of the brim to prevent the rubbing of the beaver or imitation beaver of which the hat was made, for silk hats were not then invented."—London Spectator.

A Crusher.

"Yes, sir," said the trust magnate proudly, "I am the architect of my own fortune."

"Well," rejoined the friendly critic, "all I've got to say is that it's a lucky thing for you there were no building inspectors around when you was constructing it."—Chicago News.

Eczema Was Cured Twelve Years Ago

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain, and too often a lamentable failure. With Dr. Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the sores, and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the sores replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood rich but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr. W. H. Roberts, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly from the itching. I had a doctor treat me for four months without relief, and I was getting worse all the time. A second doctor gave some relief for a time, but made no cure. I tried several advertised treatments, but without relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. This ointment cured me in a month. That was twelve years ago, and I have never had a sign of the old trouble since.

"Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box."

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. W. H. Roberts, and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct." —(Signed) Alex. Horne, Justice of the Peace.

Immunity of Children.

Professor Arnbruster asserts that the reason very young children are relatively immune to infectious diseases is that their hearts beat so much more rapidly than those of older persons that the blood flows swiftly through the arteries, and this swiftness of flow makes it difficult for micro-organisms to gain a foothold in the blood stream. —New York World.

One Danger.

"Have you fastened the windows, dear?" she asked as they were about to retire for the night.

"No. What's the use? I gave you the last dollar I had to buy that new hat, and we needn't fear burglars."

"But they might sit down on the hat, you know."—Washington Post.

HOW TO START A CANCER.

Some Very Common Practices It Would Be Well to Avoid.

An English scientist, interested in the attempts to conquer cancer, suggests the following methods by which a cancer may be produced:

"It is not easy to produce a cancer artificially; nevertheless, if you try enough you will succeed sometimes. Encourage your patients to smoke clay pipes with the varnished ends broken off or to retain sharp edged stumps of teeth in their jaws, and you may fairly expect now and then to witness the de novo production of cancer. The same end may be attained with yet more certainty should you have it in your power to select cases for the experiment in which there already exists some local evidence of chronic irritation. For instance, you may tell a patient who has a little wart or an irritable crack in his lip that he may go on smoking and amuse himself by picking off the crust whenever he has a little spare time and come to you again in six months. This is a very certain method. In another instance you may assure a man with a little pimple near the angle of the eye that it is of no consequence, not worth an operation, and advise him to apply cold cream. In a year or two's time he will probably be able to show you a very interesting example of rodent ulcer (a form of so called skin cancer).

It is obvious that the Englishman who suggests these methods does not offer them in the hope that they will be followed, but quite the contrary. He might have added that although "it is not easy to produce cancer artificially," it is still less easy to cure it, artificially or otherwise. Indeed, the fight against cancer has been one of the least successful in the whole category of medical battles. It is also one of the oldest. —Los Angeles Times.

A Pretty Experiment.

How quickly the body eliminates waste matter may be seen by the following simple and pretty experiment:

Eat a tablet of lithium citrate. Then take a clean platinum wire, hold it in a colorless flame of a Bunsen burner and note that it gives no coloration to the flame. Now cool the wire and pass it along the skin of the forehead, or after rinsing the hand in distilled water draw the wire across the palm and again hold it to the colorless Bunsen flame. Note the beautiful yellow color, due to the presence of the sodium. Next take blue glass and observe the yellow flame through this. The cobalt glass absorbs the yellow sodium rays, and the lilac flame of potassium now shows. About a half hour after taking the lithia tablet make the same test as above with a clean platinum wire. The vivid red flame of lithium is now obtained. In one short half hour the lithium entering at the mouth has been absorbed into the blood and carried to all parts of the body and is being excreted through the skin.—New York World.

Bell Tents.

The interior of a bell tent is full of surprises for the new hand. He begins by expecting it to be the airiest of lodgings; it is really the stuffiest. Unless the flaps at the entrance are left open or the apron around the foot lifted it soon becomes insufferable if there are many men sleeping in it, and it is possible to sleep ten or a dozen men or more in a bell tent, with feet to the pole, of course, and heads to the canvas. Another surprise is that there is nowhere to hang anything up. It is contrary to regulations to drive nails into the tent pole. The official way is a ring with hooks on it to be clamped around the pole, but old campaigners say that the supply of these is never anything like equal to the number of tents and that only the lucky ones get them. With all this a bell tent is the cheapest and most comfortable of temporary homes for a party of three or four once they get used to its little ways and cease to mislay things in its featureless circularity.—Liverpool Mercury.

A Story of Dickens.

M. Anatole France has an amusing reminiscence of Dickens—of whom he is a great admirer—in his "Vie Littéraire." One wonders whether it is autobiographical. "A Frenchman who made the journey to London," he writes, "went one day to see the great Charles Dickens. He was admitted and expressed his admiration as an excuse for thus trespassing on the precious time of such a being. 'Your fame,' he added, 'and the universal sympathy you inspire doubtless expose you to innumerable intrusions. Your door always is besieged. You must be visited every day by princes, statesmen, scholars, writers, artists and even madmen.' 'Yes, madmen, madmen!' cried Dickens, carried away by the agitation which toward the end of his life often moved him. 'Madmen! They alone amuse me.' And he pushed his astonished visitor out by the shoulders."

Amphibious Forces.

The use of naval forces on land is, of course, by no means novel, but not every one knows that it is a direct reversal of the policy adopted in the early days of the navy. Under Cromwell's rule army officers were placed in command of war vessels, and the great Admiral Blake was a colonel in the new model army before he went to sea. Another notable soldier to be placed in command at sea was General Monk, first duke of Albemarle, who justified the transference by winning two great sea fights against the Dutch.—Dundee Advertiser.

Why He Objected.

"Now," said the principal to one of the pupils at the close of the lesson in which he had touched on the horrors of war, "do you object to war, my boy?"

"Yes, sir; I do," was the fervent answer.

"Now tell us why."

"Because," said the youth, "wars make history, an' I jest hate history."—Exchange.

Most Glowing.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A VEST ADAPTATION FOR JUNIORS.

By Anabel Worthington.

There is never a feature introduced into the garments of women that does not find its way, sooner or later, into the frocks of our little people. For instance, the vest, which is now so popular in women's waists. It is shown in the frock illustrated herewith in a novel and attractive manner. The front of the blouse is arranged to resemble a small jacket buttoning over a small vest, which shows above the closing as a chemisette and below it as a vest. This is all ornament only, for the real closing of the frock is in the back, where there is no ornament of any kind. The neck of this frock is high, with small, flat collar, and the sleeves are long or short, as preferred. A kilt pleated skirt is joined to the blouse and this is made with a panel in the front.

These little frocks are made of cotton fabrics of all kinds, first among which is gingham. Linen and duck are also used, and a contrasting color is used for the vest in front. The trimmings may be of the same or of a third material or color. For warm weather it is possible to omit the collar and to cut away the small chemisette above the front closing button. This will leave the neck open, and separate collars of pique may be added.

The dress pattern, No. 7228, is cut in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Medium size requires 2¼ yards of 36 inch material, with ⅜ yard of 36 inch contrasting goods to trim.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c

WORK AND MERCY.

Whatever else you may be, you must not be useless, and you must not be cruel. If there is any one point which in 6,000 years of thinking about right and wrong wise and good men have agreed upon or successively by experience discovered, it is that God dislikes idle and cruel people more than any others; that his first order is, "Work while you have light," and his second, "Be merciful while you have mercy."—Ruskin.

BERLIN CLAIMS MORE GAINS IN EAST

Special Cable to The Examiner

PARIS, Aug. 17 (French Official)—There was heavy cannonading throughout the night at Boisinghe, Queenevieres Farm, and Leintrey, and grenade combats near Fontaine Aux Charmes and other points in Argonne were reported in this afternoon's communique. A German attack at Lathe Point was repulsed.

BERLIN, via wireless, Aug. 17.—The forts defending the Kovno have been stormed and captured by the German troops under Gen. Von Eichorn. Three of the forts on the northeastern front of Nova Georgivsk were also captured by the Germans.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The Germans are preparing to land troops on the coast of Finland according to a Stockholm despatch to the Morning Post to-day.

The Russians are beginning to evacuate the fortified railway centre of Bielostok, one of the vital points on the Kovno-Brest-Litovsk line, before the onward march of Von Hindenburg's armies.

ATHENS, Aug. 17.—Severe fighting continues both at Krithia and on the western side of Gallipoli Peninsula near Gaba Tepe. Mytelene despatches to-day said the British have captured a row of trenches of strategical importance near Krithia.

ROME, Aug. 17.—A special messenger reached Rome last night bearing an important communication from the Kaiser to Pope Benedict, according to a report circulated here to-day. No confirmation was obtainable at the Vatican, but it was understood the message had to do with the Pope's latest peace efforts.

OTTAWA, Aug. 17.—It is not likely that any Canadian units were on board the Royal Edward, but a number of Canadian medical men are serving in the British army, and it is just possible that some of them may have been en route to the Dardanelles.

Canadian nurses are also known to have been serving at Malta, and perhaps also at places at the front. It was recently announced that Queen's University Medical Corps would go to Dardanelles.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 17.—Reports were brought over on the American liner Dominion, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool, to the effect that the American liner Merion requisitioned by the British Admiralty as a transport, had been sunk by the fire of the Turkish batteries at the Dardanelles.

15,000 CANADIANS FOR DARDANELLES.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 17.—Hon. T. Chase Casgrain announced at the Canadian Club banquet in Vancouver yesterday that he had been officially advised by the Minister of Militia that 15,000 of the Canadian soldiers now in Britain will be sent to the Dardanelles.

STATE DEPARTMENT SILENT.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The State Department was silent to-day concerning its reported investigation of charges against the German Government by the New York world. No investigation had been ordered it was stated, but full publication of charges might bring active actions.

One of chief interest of the administration, it was learned to-day, is to determine whether the German newspaper, "Fatherland," is subsidized by the German Government. This paper has been bitter in frequent attacks upon President Wilson, and if an organ of the Imperial Government, the administration would be greatly interested in establishing this fact.

There was The two were Mr. and Mrs. Skurizi of 656 Reid Street, whose son, a young Italian of six years' residence in Peterborough, was leaving with the 4th draft. LEO FRANK IS LYNCHED BY AN ATLANTA MOB

Wealthy Manufacturer Convicted of Murdering Girl Taken From Cell at Midnight and Put to Death

AT SCENE OF CRIME

Special to The Examiner.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 17.—Leo M. Frank, the wealthy manufacturer, convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan, nearly two years ago, was taken from his cell in the Georgia State prison, at midnight, by a mob in automobiles, and lynched at the scene of his crime. Frank's case has been a storm centre for months. Governor Slaton was forced to call out troops to protect himself, and subsequently resigned when he commuted Frank's sentence to imprisonment for life.

RESPONSIBILITY OF EVERY FIT MAN

Returning Officer Emphasizes the Need of More Men

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 16.—"It is the feeling of those in training that they are not being backed up by the people at home as they should," remarked Major B. H. Belson, 4th Battalion, Canadian expeditionary force, today when he arrived at the Welland, after a term in a London hospital after being wounded at St. Julien in April. Major Belson, being granted four months' leave, left Shorncliffe on August 2nd in charge of 21 Canadians, convalescent, wounded, and others of the second contingent invalided home from Shorncliffe. He left his charge at Quebec, where he landed from the Hesperian.

After five days in a field hospital in France with a gun-shot wound, Major Belson was removed to a nursing hospital in London, which he was allowed to leave two days, and was obliged to return and undergo an operation, septic poisoning having set in. He will return to England at the completion of his leave, and expects to again go to the front. He is emphasizing the need of men and more men at every opportunity, and says he cannot discover one fit man on the street with an excuse for that man's responsibility.

RECRUITS ARE ADDED

Enlistment Brisk at the Armouries Yesterday and Artillery and Infantry Units Both Made Good Showing

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Yesterday was another brisk day at the Armouries. Ten more recruits were sworn in for the infantry and the local detachment now numbers 74 men. The artillery also did well yesterday with a number of applicants left over to be examined to-day. In the short time the recruiting for the battery has been under way over 70 men have applied, of which about 40 have been accepted. Twenty-one left last night for Kingston, and there are that many more for the next draft, with no falling off in the number of applicants.

Since the recruiting campaign began, two weeks ago, 160 men have been accepted here for over-seas service.

Tom Miller, Millbrook, Chief of Police, and son of Mr. Finch Miller, who was through the South African war with the 1st Battalion Scots, going over from Canada to enlist, was a visitor at the recruiting headquarters last night, and carried away a bundle of placards and posters with which to attract the Millbrook young men of military age. Tom is doing his best to get his wife's consent in order to enlist here.

The infantry recruits, headed by their own band, route marched through the southern part of the city this morning, paying a visit to the Canadian General Electric Company at noon, as the employees filed out.

Roy Harper, who has been with H. Le Brun and Co. for the past seven years, and who left last night with the 24th Field Battery draft for the 33rd Battery, C.E.F., was presented with a handsome wrist watch by the staff of the store, yesterday. Gunner Harper was also presented with an address. He has been most popular with those associated with him in the store and with the general public, and will be greatly missed.

The general committee of the Speakers' Patriotic League has made arrangements by which recruits with defects requiring surgical attention, are treated at the two local hospitals free of charge to the men.

THE WESTERN FAIR.

London, Ont., Sept. 10th to 15th

The new steel Grand stand erected on the Exhibition Ground is nearing completion. It is a magnificent structure with a seating capacity for 10,000 people. Every seat in the whole building commands a good view of the track and amusement platform. "Safety First" has been in the minds of the management from the time the building was first thought of, and this principle has certainly been carried out in its construction. There are three twenty foot entrances to the front, one for the reserved section and two for the 25c stands. These entrances will also be used as exits along with the other exits at either end of the stand. The accommodation provided will certainly be appreciated by the visitors to the Exhibition and the management are to be congratulated on erecting such a fine structure. Although the accommodation will be far in advance of the old stand the prices will remain the same, 50c for the reserved section and 25c for the balance. Prize lists, entry forms, programmes and all information from the Secretary, A. M. Hunt, London, Ontario. 1d 1w

TWO DAYS' SESSION

Companions of the Forest, Ancient Order of Foresters, Meet in the City—Welcomed by Mayor Butler

THE VISITING DELEGATES

The fifteenth bi-annual session of the Companions of the Forest opened in Peterborough today with seventeen delegates present, in addition to a number of High Circle officers. The Companions of the Forest is an auxiliary branch of the Ancient Order of Foresters and is composed of thirty-nine circles scattered throughout the length and breadth of Canada. This year's meeting is being held in the Sons of England Hall, 134 1-2 Hunter street. The presiding officer is Mrs. E. Swanston of Toronto, High Chief Companion. Other members of the High Circle present are Mr. R. Howie of Toronto, Assistant Permanent Secretary, Mrs. Bobby, Toronto, High Inner Guard, and Mrs. Corbett, Toronto, High Outer Guard.

Welcomed the Delegates.

At the opening of this morning's session, His Worship Mayor Butler, accompanied by Ald. G. W. Green, acting chairman of the Reception committee, in the absence of Ald. Dobbin, waited upon the Companions in their essential chamber and extended a hearty welcome on behalf of the city. This was graciously accepted by the visiting delegates, after which the regular order of business took precedence. The various committees were appointed and a number of other preliminaries disposed of. At noon the meeting adjourned until tomorrow morning at nine o'clock. This afternoon will be spent in sight-seeing, which includes a trip to the Little Lock and a sail on the Otonabee River. This part of the reception has been arranged by the local circle.

The Register.

Following is the list of delegates registered up until noon today:

From Toronto—Mr. H. J. Bobbie, P.H.C.C.; Mrs. E. F. Rockwood, P.H.C.C.; Mrs. M. Hastings; Mrs. J. McGovern; Mrs. E. Knowles; Mrs. J. Malcolm; Mrs. M. Nott.

From Hamilton—Mr. Jean Phillips, Mrs. Potter, Mrs. T. Martin, also Mr. Walter Richards, London Past High Chief Companion; M. Bull, Grimsby; R. J. Nevin, Niagara Falls; Eva Tremain, Peterborough; Mrs. J. White, Brantford; Miss Ada I. Hooper, Strathroy; and Mr. James Tanner, St. Thomas.

The session will last two days. While there are only seventeen delegates present, representing thirty-nine circles, it must be remembered that a number of circles decided to close the season that would have been represented at Peterborough next week. The circles have been practically active in assisting the Red Cross movement and endeavors of a patriotic nature.

A HOME DANGER.

In this welter of war in the rush of big events, we often lose sight of the significance of other calamities. On Sunday night in Toronto, a heavy auto in the darkness, plunged through a party of people in the semi-darkness, and rushed on, nor stopped to see what murder had been committed. One man killed and several badly hurt were the result. This heathenish indifference to the safety of human life and limb is not one whit better in essential spirit than the outrageous spirit of the German militarists. It is the doctrine of "force," the ability to do damage, carried into effect. The same spirit is sometimes evident in Peterborough. We have drivers of autos who rush through the streets at dangerous speed, to the peril of persons frequenting the streets. It's God's mercy that somebody hasn't been killed before this; and there is danger that some serious, if not, fatal accident will happen from this furious driving. We are losing enough lives, of Peterborough people, in ways that cannot be prevented—in the trenches, on the field of battle. We don't want any lives lost by means that can be prevented—by simply enforcing the regulations against dangerously rapid auto-driving. When the inevitable accident does happen—there will be a great outcry, a great fuss made for a few days, something that won't do any good. Our authorities that permit the furious driving referred to will be accessories before the fact if a fatal accident happens. Many a woman's heart stops its beating, when she sees an auto rushing, at 20 or 25 mile speed, through a street where careless children are playing.

OUR WORK CUT OUT.

There's a time for everything; but the present is no time for seeking party profit. The Toronto News gives prominence to a report from Ottawa stating the fact that the tower of the Victoria Museum is collapsing. This story is legitimate for it is only a statement of fact; but it is not right for the News to go out of its way to emphasize the fact that the tower was built under the Laurier Government. This is also a fact, and perhaps is no credit to the Laurier Government, but it is wrong for the News at this time, when there is no party politics extant, to try to discredit political opponents. The scandal will keep. It would be just as reasonable and timely to call up the ghost of the Pacific scandal, or that of the Langevin scandal. The government responsible for these is not on trial; it has passed into history, and there is no more excuse for bringing up the misdeeds of its time now than there is for insisting upon the Victoria tower matter at Ottawa, in order to discredit a political leader who, though not in power, is doing as much as his opponents to stimulate recruiting and help on the war. After the war is over, and not till then, have party politics any place in our Canadian life. When we have saved by united action what is worth saving, we can decide in regard the better way of administering our trust. Our work is cut out for us and it does not include party politics.

WOMEN AND MEN.

Alberta has a Direct Legislation Act, by employment of which questions upon which the legislature can't agree are submitted to a direct vote of the people to settle the matter. Under this act the province recently voted for prohibition of strong drink. The people used this act to make the province "dry"; but the next use of it will probably be to make the province lively. It will be employed next to vote on the question of giving women votes.

The province may be dry, but it won't be dull if women get the vote—if they use it to express in public affairs the same energy they display in ruling the fast and fashionable.

In this war we have women richly earning the vote and showing themselves men in a way that men do not show themselves. Women can't go to the front and fight, but they are doing what they can do, which is more than can be said of many of our young men.

While women are sacrificing their home leisure, their social enjoyments, and working day by day, and night by night, to help the fighting men in the ranks, scores and hundreds of our men—our young men especially—are droning away the precious hours, doing nothing to help forward the fight.

Yet they have votes and look down with scorn upon the women who may ask the privilege of voting—to become in the language of their critics, "petticoated politicians."

Yet these same young men, who assume such superior airs over women and do nothing themselves, at the last elections waved the flag and shouted loyalty till they were hoarse, and by their votes, hepled Ontario declare by a large majority that it was the only loyal province in the Dominion—the bulwark of the Empire, and the elect custodian of the palladium of British liberty.

Now these same men, when the flag is in danger; when the Empire is in real peril — a danger something greater than selling potatoes to the "Yankees"—When our liberties are at stake — are mute as mice. Then they could wave the flag and shout empty boasts of loyalty. Now they refuse to follow the flag, and enter the path of duty it points out.

Women are charged with talking too much; that may be so, but at this time of peril, they are doing something, while the men that jeer at them and their claims to political equality with men, are doing nothing.

They could shout loyalty and rally round the flag when the flag was in no danger, but now when the hand of the Hun is stretched forth to drag down the flag and all it represents, they sing small. They do nothing; they won't lift a finger to sustain the flag and the cause it stands for.

There is a time when waving the flag means something. Last night the 33rd Battery boys went to entrain for the war; they were escorted to the railway station by the new recruits of the 59th; at their head was a recruit carrying a flag, which he waved just once in response to a few shame-faced cheers—in the faces of hundreds of young men who should have been in the line of march with him.

Yet if the occasion arose again we should find these same lip loyalists again giving tongue, and waving, in some comparatively trivial cause, the flag they won't follow now.

But then we shall have a new estimation of the pinche-beck—the German-silver-ring of the loyalty of these fair weather patriots, who will shout but won't shoot; who will flap the flag but won't follow it. When the flag can take care of itself, they force their "protection" upon it; when it is in danger they shy away from it.

Compared with women, there are men in Ontario, men in Peterborough, who are not fit to touch the hem of their garments. All our women are working to help on the cause of the Allies. They are fighting in their way; the only way they can fight; while many, far too many, of our men eligible for fighting, are not fighting, simply loafing the hours away standing back idly watching their fellow-citizens, fighting their battles in the trenches against heavy odds, and vainly caling for the help of the men at home as able to fight, as those men who have shown themselves men, and are doing the work of men in the trenches.

This morning we get a despatch reporting the sinking of a troop transport—by the way the first casualty of its kind in a year of war. Some 500 or 600 soldiers were drowned. Somebody has to take their place—to fill the depleted ranks. Here is an appeal to Peterborough young men eligible to enlist. These drowned soldiers were fighting the battle for us all. Shall we who can fight, who should fight—must fight or be everlastingly disgraced — stand idly by and fail to lift a hand to sieze a rifle, and show ourselves men as our women are showing themselves men, by doing the work of real men—by doing what they can do.

JOURNALISTIC CRITICISM.

Around the octagon table in the Pittsburg Press club dining-room the other day they were talking of the complaints registered by Constant Reader. They agreed in the opinion that the laymen will never be able to understand the tricks of the type. He cannot understand why every item in which he is interested cannot be displayed on the first page. He seems to think that every editorial should voice his point of view and that every page should be new to him, even if he had told the original quip himself.

"Every reader thinks that the newspaper is printed for his particular benefit," said one.

"Well, he pays for it and that's his privilege," said a defender of Constant Reader. "Criticism, even by one who doesn't know, promotes efficiency. It reminds me of an experience I had on a small town daily where we were obliged to 'railroad' half our stuff and two-thirds of the time the proofs were never read. One day one of our leading citizens came in and in quivering rage asked me what we meant by saying that he and his wife had just returned from abroad 'very ragged looking' and that they were 'well known in police circles.' And there it was in cold type. It took me half an hour to convince him that our intentions were perfectly good—that we meant to say that he was 'very rugged looking' and that he and his wife were well known in 'polite circles.'"—Exchange.

SAVE MONEY NOW.

There are two good reasons why everybody should exert himself to save a little more money now than commonly. A purely selfish reason is that saving now counts more than saving during ordinary times. A dollar saved now will yield larger returns than a dollar saved two or three years ago, and more probably than a dollar saved two or three years in the future. Money saved now can be invested with as much safety as is humanly achievable so as to bring in 5 per cent. or more. A few years ago savings invested in securities of similar strength would yield only 3 per cent. When this war is over the world is going to be very poor. Persons who have any money at all are going to be relatively rich. Those who save now will possess the world later on. Another reason for saving now is that it is the best thing a noncombatant can do to help the world from the fate that is being brought upon it by the war. Accumulated savings are the basis of civilization. Out of accumulated savings hospitals are founded, railroads are built, and new discoveries in science are made possible. The accumulated savings of the world, in so far as they exist in Europe, are being destroyed as fast as possible. By this destruction the world will be set back inevitably. Any American or Canadian living outside the zone of general destruction, who saves money now will help by so much to counteract this setback of civilization.—Colliers Weekly.

The Night of a Million Shells

There was a phase of the war, in earlier days upon the eastern front, when the bayonet was the key to victory and the infantryman balanced the fate of the future and is great work-calloused hands. There followed a second phase, which overlaps into the third and will no doubt endure till the end, that of the intrenching tool, when the regiments went boldly to earth, and, for the moment, seemed to have reduced the war to a stalemate. They showed to the enemy only a loophole breastwork, they did in graves from the death that threatened them; the bosom of their motherland was their refuge and their buttress.

On the heels of that came the new phase, the era of steel, fire multiplied and concentrated to a degree never before dreamed of. One reads that at the battle of Neuve Chapelle in the west Sir John French prepared his attack with a fire so rapid and lavish that the British guns ran out of shell. But long before that Lody had heard an orchestra of 600 guns all shouting together; and at the fight which I have named the battle of Wola Shidloyska—since nobody else has given any name at all—there were 600 guns on the German side alone, and not less than 400 on the Russian.

That was the night when the world lay prone under an oppression of tremendous sound, when the voices of cannon no longer sounded in separate detonations, but were blended into a single blast of unimaginable noise and the black winter heaven rained shell upon the flat, stubborn earth of upland.

The gun flashes swelled and sank in broad blazes of wildfire; and, like ants of war in a typhoon, the German storming columns broke the Russian line and seized the village and the great vodka works at Wola Shidloyska.

The German guns were firing a new variety of explosive shell that night, a shell that shattered the parapets of the trenches and left strange traces behind it. For a day or two there were wild stories adrift of poison shells, of magic projectiles that blinded those they did not kill. The gunners explained the matter.

"Melinite," they said and cleared up the mystery.

He is a great soldier, the German. Forty years of preparation for war have left him little to learn—unless, perhaps something of psychology. But a great soldier, none the less; he was the first to see, what is now plain, that the answer to the well-constructed trench is not the spatter of shrapnel, but the high-explosive shell that rends and blasts its way through sandbags and earth, which turns the ground on which it bursts into a volcano. "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word," say Sir John French and the Grand Duke Nikolai Nikolaievitch.—Perceval Gibbon in Collier's Weekly.

"Yes," said Madge, "I spent the entire evening telling that nice young boarder on the beach that I'd heard he had a terrible reputation for kissing girls against their will." "And what did he do?" "He sat there like a booby and denied it."

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements—a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

GREAT RACE IN BOTH LEAGUES FOR THE FLAG

The world series games are only a matter of seven weeks away, and to the strictly neutral observer the entries for the annual classic are still a mystery. Especially is the matter complicated in the National League, where four teams are still very much in the running, and two more are conceded possibilities by the bookmakers.

In the American League the wise ones are giving it to the Boston Red Sox. The decision is popular outside Detroit and Chicago.

Opinion in the baseball circles was pretty evenly divided between the Phillies and the Superbas for the pick of the Tener circuit. The sporting fraternity is suspicious still that the Phillies are going to crack down the stretch and they want to be out from under when it comes. The Quakers were still on the long end of the odds but betting men frankly admit that they don't know how to play their money.

Brooklyn was being favorably considered today because it is in the midst of an upward scramble that may carry it to the top. The Superbas have played at an .870 clip the past week, winning six and dropping but one.

Grizzled baseball men say that never in the history of the game did they see the teams so bunched so late in the season. Usually the thing lies between two or possibly three teams, the third week in August. But this year six clubs are still in the running, and from the feat of Cincinnati in taking four straight from the Pirates, it appears as though the Reds were going to make a belated bid for the honors.

A DISAPPOINTMENT FOR RIP VAN WINKLE

Rip Van Winkle dropped into the village barber's shop after his twenty-year sleep.

"How's everything in the big leagues these days?" he asked the village barber.

"Same as ever?"

"Cobb still leading the American League?"

"Yep."

"Wagner still playing?"

"Yep."

"Mathewson still pitching?"

"Yep."

"McGraw still being suspended?"

"Yep."

"Evers still scrapping?"

"Yep."

"Emslie still umpiring?"

"Johnson still bluffing?"

"Yep."

"Ebetts still having holidays?"

"Yep."

"Yanks won the pennant?"

"Nop."

"Oh, well, I guess I'll go back to sleep."

Trout With Guelph Team

Hamilton Spectator: Another International League player will join the Guelph team here to-day in Trout, who has been with the Toronto team all season. Trout will play in the out field, filling the gap left by Collins, who was moved in to cover third after Charlie Isnaes was injured. Trout should hit over the .300 mark in this league, and he has several times given demonstrations of his fielding ability. His presence on the Guelph team will strengthen the Leafs for the stretch run and the Brants will have a merry chase beating Lee and his lulus out for second place.

LAWN BOWLING

A very interesting game in the fob series was played on yesterday between the Waddell and Brightman rinks. The result was in doubt to the last end.

R. Cottrell was played as lead on the Brightman rink and as Cottrell was a skip, the Waddell rink claimed a handicap of three points. But notwithstanding this the Brightman rink won out and have now the right to wear the fobs.

The next game will be between the Elliot and Brightman rinks on Wednesday evening. The score was as follows:

Waddell	02400013002 -14
Brightman	30042300110 -16

Allowing Waddell the handicap of three, the Brightman rink won out by one shot.

LACROSSE

A lacrosse practice will be held at Central Park this evening at 6.30. All the boys are asked to turn out.

To keep a sponge in good order it should be washed occasionally in warm water to which has been added a little tartaric acid; afterwards rinse in clear water.

Wet Spell at an End

Good Weather in Prospect for a Few Days at Least

Notwithstanding that the farmers have been greatly concerned about the amount of rain which has fallen lately, the weather man announced the end of the wet spell. In a tone full of feeling he said in answer to the question concerning how long the wet spell would last: "It is over for the present." He could not give an opinion how long "the present" would last.

In the forecast for to-day there is no mention of rain. The weather will be fair and cool, with north to northeasterly winds.

FLEET ACTIVE IN DARDANELLES NEW LANDING IN GALLIPOLI

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 17.—A despatch to the Daily Chronicle says:

"The new successful landing on the Gallipoli Peninsula at Suvla Bay and the manner in which it was effected cannot fail to exercise a moral effect on the enemy. The landing took place on the shore in front of Salt Lake (note a small observation force of Turks was on the spot, the Turks having been led by recent activities and reports to concentrate their forces on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles, and at Smyrna, where they thought attacks were probable. Our whole landing force, with its ammunition, baggage and artillery, reached shore practically without opposition, and with only a few casualties. The force immediately advanced quickly and seized positions which it was planned should be taken. There strong, entrenched positions were organized. A right wing was thrown out and a junction effected with the left wing of our forces established before Sari Bair. Our new positions threaten the Turks' communications by land with the extremity of the peninsula. The enemy eventually brought up forces to attack the newly-landed troops but were easily repulsed with serious loss. This defeat of the enemy enabled our forces still further to consolidate their position.

"The fleet during the last few days has been very active."

An Athens despatch to the Daily Telegraph:

"At a recent meeting of the Young Turks the question of a regency was discussed on the ground that Sultan Mohammed V. is far from well, and incapable of attending to affairs of state.

"The situation is complicated, however, by the knowledge that Crown Prince Youssef Izzedin is lukewarm in his attitude towards the war. In the hope of convincing the Crown Prince that all is going well, party leaders recently persuaded him to pay a personal visit to the Dardanelles front."

French and British warships are continuously bombarding the coast of Asia Minor. News from Mitylene today states that the Turkish towns of Dedeia, Phokia, Nous-sandassi and Ephesus have been shelled and damaged. Turkish camps were dispersed and the populations of many coast towns driven into the interior.

THE NEW ARMY IN THE FIELD

General Headquarters, British Expeditionary Force, Aug. 17.—Sir John French has answered Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria's eager question: "Where is England's New Army?" In his latest despatch the British Commander-in-Chief makes the public announcement that some divisions of the new army are at the front. I am therefore at liberty to tell you now something of the appearance and experiences of the new levies — England's citizen army—and of the impression they have produced, during the two months they have been out here, on the seasoned veterans of our army in the field.

I remember very well my first meeting with the first battalions of the New Army to take the field, realizing, as I caught sight of the number of the battalion painted on their transport carts that here we had men of the New Army. It was a soaking wet day and the roads were sloughs of mud.

I came upon this battalion marching into its billets in the village where we war correspondents have our headquarters. The men had come a long way in the rain, they were wet to the skin, and smeared with mud from head to foot. But they were marching well and steadily. They went into their billets and set about getting a hot meal with the resourcefulness of old campaigners.

Physically they were a very fine body and their smartness in matters of saluting and drill was very noticeable. Since then, I have very frequently come across battalions of the new armies. Like everybody else out here I have been greatly impressed by their magnificent physique. Anybody who imagined that the first batch of recruits who followed Lord Kitchener's demand for a million men would be desultory out-of-works and the like—the waste of the land—has been surmised, would be astonished if he could see these splendid young men, hardened to the pink of condition by their training at home and now being gradually seasoned out here to the actual conditions of warfare.

Thirsting To Get Them.

There is a rude shock, preparing for Prince Rupprecht and his murdering rascals who are so anxious to know where the New Army is. The New Army assures me that its one desire now is to get at the Boches with the bayonet, and there is every visible reason for believing that when that happy juncture arrives the New Army will give a good account of itself.

Since their arrival at the front the new levies have been undergoing a gradual process of initiation into the ways of trench warfare. Brains and muscles never cease from working in the trenches. We learn as we go on, improving our knowledge as to the laying out of trenches and the placing of traverses and the elevation of parapet and parados, improving our trench weapons and our knowledge of their uses, the machine gun, the trench mortar, the hand grenade. First the officers, then the non-commissioned officers, starting by detachments, later on by battalions, have been sent into the trenches to get touch of "the real thing," which no amount of careful training at home can give, until, at the moment of writing, the divisions of the New Army which are in the field are able to hold their part of the line with the Regulars and Territorials.

The New Army has not yet had its chance to attack. But it has been "blooded." It has had its casualties in the trenches.

I had a talk with the general commanding one of the divisions of the New Army the other day. He was most enthusiastic about his men. "I don't believe they have a nerve in their body," he said. "They are magnificent men, in spirit as in physique, and all they want now is to have a go at the Germans. Once they get going in an attack there won't be any holding them back.

"I have never seen our Territorial system to better advantage than in battalion the men came from their own recruiting area, and, in addition to the bond of dialect, have all kinds of family, social, and business connections with their officers and with one another. Their discipline is excellent. You have seen for yourself what a smart body of men they are. They are shaping splendidly and taking to the very new conditions of life out here like ducks to water.

"I am very satisfied with their officers already. They are very quick to learn and insatiable for knowledge, and they have great influence with their men. I think we shall open the eyes of the inquiring Prince Rupprecht when we get to grips with him."

CZAR'S ARMIES ESCAPE TRAP MASTERLY RETREAT CONTINUES WITHOUT LOSS OF GUNS

Defenders of Fortress on The Niemen Delivered Attack on The Besiegers—Claim to be Closing in LONDON, Aug. 16. In the Polish sector the various German armies are slowly drawing in their line and advancing from the north-west and south on Brest-Litovsk. While they continue to take small batches of prisoners they make no claim to the capture of artillery or booty, which is considered by military observers as a fair indication that Grand Duke Nicholas' armies continue their orderly retreat, and that for a long time to come will be able to prevent the Germans from detaching any part of their army for large ventures elsewhere.

Having recovered from the check inflicted on him early in the week by the Russians, General von Buelow commanding that portion of the army of Field Marshal von Hindenburg operating to the west of the River Dvinsk, again has taken the offensive and, according to the official report published by Berlin to-day, has beaten the Russians in a battle in the vicinity of Kubisko and pushed them back in a north-easterly direction, taking over two thousand prisoners.

To the south before Kovno the Russians, according to the same source of information, made an unsuccessful sortie from Kovno, which the Germans are now approaching.

Two salient points stand out in the Russian situation to-night. The first, a fact, is that the great Russian armies have securely avoided every German attempt to trap them in the masterly retreat from Warsaw and are safely arrayed in their new line. The second, a problem, is whether they will be able to make good their stand on the new front or will be forced in turn to evacuate it and thus permit the Teutonic allies to occupy more Russian soil.

The new positions occupied by the Germans and Austrians were outlined with approximate accuracy on good authority today, for the first time since the fall of Warsaw. The line, starting from the vicinity of Ossowetz near the Prussian border, opposite the Mazurian lakes region, curves to the south and east, running through Sokolow, Siedlec, Lukow, Ostrow, and Vladova.

The concentration of Austro-German forces in the direction of the fortresses of Brest-Litovsk, is proceeding along three roads, running to that point from Malkin, from Lukow, and from Vladova. The invaders are still between 40 and 50 miles from Brest-Litovsk and are meeting with strong opposition at every step of their advance.

According to Russian military observers it is expected that in the near future the original plan of retirement from the Vistula line will be accomplished and that Brest-Litovsk, although not yet in the sphere of activity, will assume its function as one end of the Russian line. In Petrograd the opinion is expressed with confidence that the advance of the Austrians and Germans will be checked on this line.

GERMAN SUBMARINE BOMBARDS TOWN ON THE ENGLISH COAST

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Parton, Harrington and Whitehaven, in Cumberland, English, on the Irish Sea, were bombarded yesterday by a German submarine, a British official statement last night announced. Some fires were caused, but the damage was slight, and there were no casualties, the statement adds.

The text of the statement follows:

"A German submarine fired several shells at Parton, Harrington and Whitehaven between 4:30 a.m. and 5:20 a.m. yesterday, but no material damage was caused.

"A few shells hit the railway embankment north of Parton, but train service was only slightly delayed.

"Fires were caused at Whitehaven and at Harrington, which were soon extinguished.

"No casualties were reported."

Whitehaven, which lies near the entrance of Solway Firth, has a population of about 20,000. The town has numerous factories for the manufacture of cordage, sail cloth and other commodities, together with iron and brass foundries and shipyards. Harrington is a small town five miles north of Whitehaven, its population being about 4,000. Parton is another small seaport town a mile and a half from Whitehaven.

Germans Compelled To Change Their Operations From Warsaw

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Aug. 17.—The general activity which is compelling the Germans to give immediate attention to their northern half of the campaign has changed the character of the operations from War-saw. The deployment of six German armies of from 40 to 45 corps over a front of 180 versts facing Osowiec and Brest-Litovsk shows that their future tasks in the woody, swampy zone of Polie-sie surrounding Brest-Litovsk to the south-east excludes the possibility of their turning the Russian left flank. In the Baltic provinces on the Russian right the Germans are now reinforced, the troops having been brought from Poland, where the army of General Woyrsch has been filled by Austrians. Serious battles are expected now in the Baltic region, where the enemy has latterly been compelled to harmonize his operations with the issue of the recent sea fight. He retreated pending the arrival of reinforcements, at the same time keeping up his communications with the sea. Now that his reinforcements have arrived, he will make the most stubborn efforts to regain the lost ground. Meanwhile reports from Riga show that there has been a resumption of the normal life of the city.

From the Ciechanowiec region, where Woyrsch lost 800 Austrians and many machine guns, operations are not likely to develop seriously now, as the locality is swampy and great Russian forces are concentrated at Bielsk protecting the railway at Bielstock. The enemy's immediate task here is to hinder the Russians' normal course of regroupment, and also gain more territory so as to enable him to keep his troops, which will be necessary later for the battle for Brest and Litovsk.

The leading monasteries of Russia have asked and obtained permission to employ their work-shops in making shells for the army.

TURKISH OFFICERS MUTINY ON GALLIPOLI PENINSULA RINGLEADERS ARRESTED

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 16 — An Athens despatch to the Chronicle says: "Strained and increasingly bad relations between the German and Turkish army officers have led to a serious crisis. I have it on quite indisputable authority that a few days ago a quarrel among staff and other officers at the front in the Gallipoli Peninsula led to a mutiny of formidable dimensions against the Germans. The later were forced to take the strongest measures to quell the insurrection and with considerable difficulty arrested the ringleaders and some other officers involved. These numbered 45. They were sent in chains to Constantinople, where they would be shot, but the German commander heard rumored threats of revolt, and did not feel himself in a strong enough position to do so immediately. The arrests caused a great sensation throughout the ranks of the army, and tended to increase the very considerable indignation against the Germans, who now have no real friends even among the most prominent Turks. I have spoken to-day with four people who just arrived here from the Turkish capital. All agree in representing the situation there as very perilous. One of them was told by the Sultan's physicians that his Majesty is very ill, quite incapable of attending to state affairs and said to be in a serious state of nervous prostration. Audiences are denied even to the most prominent Germans. It is learned authoritatively that the greatest indignation has been aroused in all circles in the capital by the proposal of Prince Hohenzoholangenburg to put the Germans into administrative posts in the capital and throughout the country.

In spite of optimistic statements from Constantinople, the Turkish ammunition supplies are nearing exhaustion as the result of repeated attacks by the allied forces at the Dardanelles. Private advices received at Athens said that the German and Turkish diplomats have renewed their efforts to obtain consent of the Balkan States for the passage of munitions to Turkey.

Boatloads of wounded from the latest fighting on Gallipoli Peninsula continue to arrive at Constantinople. It is estimated that 120,000 Turkish wounded are now in the Constantinople hospitals.

According to French official advices the British took 600 prisoners in recent operations. The battle was continuing when these despatches were filed to the French War Office, with English artillery breaking down the Turkish trenches on a 200-yard front. The Turks are making gallant counter attacks, but have been unable to withstand the English artillery fire and bayonet charges. British reinforcements have landed successfully at Suvla Bay, north of Ari Burnu, despite the enemy's opposition, and now occupy positions along the cliffs. From this region the British are advancing southward toward Gaba Tepe. French troops have advanced slightly, their artillery holding back several Turk attacks."

Marking Ink First wet the part of the linen containing the stain, then stretch across the top of a cup or basin, about two thirds full of hot water, then apply salts of lemon to the stain. Let it remain till the mark shows signs of giving; then wash the linen, and the stains will have disappeared. The water must be near or quite boiling, so as to enable the steam to rise through the linen, and do not attempt to wash until the ink shows signs of disappearing.

DIARY OF BAVARIAN PRISONER CONTAINS REMARKABLE ENTRIES

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The diary of a Bavarian prisoner captured near Arras reveals the remarkable change which has come over the spirits of the German troops.

The Bavarian in question was a reservist. He left for the front on December 20. "O, Germany, you are strong and beautiful!" he exclaimed as he crossed the Rhine. His notes betray no surprise, no emotion, at his first view of the ruins of Belgium. Louvaine causes him to write: "Poor Belgium! the friendship of England is costly, indeed!" The Bavarian is struck by the refinement of the French women.

Born for War.

On January 2, on the eve of his departure for the trenches, the soldier exclaims in a burst of patriotism: "It is for to-night. With God, for King and Fatherland and the dear ones at home! Hurrah! The German is born for war.

"Our Bavarians are going to show that they are worthy of their warrior ancestors! We are going to test the courage and strength of Bavarians against the sons of perfidious Albion.

"Poor England! If she had foreseen this she would not have acted as she did! 'Long live the Emperor and King Louis!'"

Alas! a few days in the trenches suffice to damp all this exuberant enthusiasm. On January 13th the Bavarian returns to Comines, and his notebook contains these reflections:

"Enthusiasm has fallen to zero among us all. It is not to be wondered at either. We do not get enough rest. We are given cold food and not enough of it. The weather is abominable and we are overworked.

"If our jingoes and journalists came here with us they would tell a very different tale from the humbug which they make people at home swallow!

"As for us, we only ask for one thing—rest, rest, and sleep."

"What a Sorry Menu!"

On January 15 the Bavarian has the toothache and writes gloomily: "Unwell; diarrhoea, bad weather, trenches! What a sorry menu!"

The regimental doctor it appears, calls the men pigs, dirty dogs, etc.

A few days afterwards the soldier writes: "If only it were all finished, or it only those who caused the war and who will reap all the benefits were to come to the front there would then be some justice; but no, it is the poor who have always to bear the brunt."

February 1st.—More complaints.

Gigantic Humbug.

On February 5 the King of Bavaria pays a visit to the camp, and a review is organized. The Bavarian, who only a week or two ago was bubbling over with loyalty, writes wearily:

"Got up at 6 o'clock for this stupid review. An hour's march to Warwick, where we have to wait two and a quarter hours. By order we give three cheers for the King. He replies 'Good morning, comrades,' which, of course is just the thing to appease our hunger and thirst!

"The march past begins. The King salutes us with a slight bend of the head while we have to hold our heads high, which is a good deal more difficult.

February 8.—The Bavarian is at Messines, behind the line of fire. For the first time he and his comrades are comfortably lodged, and he expatiates on the fact: "We are only eight in a spacious and comfortable room. Of course, though, a shell is liable to hit us. Our lieutenant's room is horribly small and dark, but it is sheltered from bombs. That is the essential for our brave officers."

It would be interesting to have a sequel written by the Bavarian after his capture. Now at all events, he is at last getting proper food and rest.

Cards, the Theatre and the Dance Were All Emphatically Condemned

Evangelist Sharpe's subject at the big Tabernacle meeting last night was "Peterborough's Three Big Devils," or "The Dance, the Card Table and the Theatre.' His address was directed largely to professed Christians and church members. He said: "In order for God to use you and me we have got to come out from the unclean world and leave it alone. You must be out and out for God. You cannot be a soul winner and a dancer, a theatre goer and a card player.' These are three of the devils most fascinating hates to catch men and women.

The Card Devil is the first one, and I want to put it on trial. I say to the greasy deck of cards, 'Did you ever save anybody? Did you ever comfort any aching heart? Is there anything uplifting in you? Would I be a better evangelist as a card player? Ah! you know I wouldn't. God says whatsoever thou doest, do all to the glory of God.

Evangelist G. M. Sharpe who will speak at the Big Tabernacle TO-NIGHT, on Hunter Street, at 8 o'clock. Hear Him!

You can put me down as hating what the devil loves, and as loving what the devil hates. Where do we find the cards? Is there a low down den of iniquity on earth where you won't find them? I object to the company cards keep, and that's why I hate them. You'll have to admit that cards are the tool of the gambler—consequently of the devil. Nine out of every ten gamblers learned to play cards in a home, and eight out of ten in a so-called Christian home. You can't blame the gambling dens for making gamblers. They're made in so-called Christian homes. If you have cards in your home and are asking young people to come in and play, your home is a recruiting station for the gambling den. My friend, throw away that old greasy deck of cards to-night.

The Theatre. Don't try to tell me anything about the stage, for I've been on both sides of the curtain. I know too much about it. There would not be so many whippoorwill widows to-day if it were not for the dirty teachings of the stage. Marriage is treated as a joke in the average play. Give me the power to pass a law that will require women to dress on the stage as they dress on the street and I'll kill the theatre.

What About the Dance.—I don't believe it is possible for a young man to go to a dance and go home with prayer meeting thoughts in his mind. You either, young girl. There are half a million girls in Brothels in the United States and 350,000 of them are the products of the dance hall. Speaking to married men, the big Evangelist threw out this challenge: You'd rather go out and pick potato bugs by moonlight than dance with your own wife. It's the other fellow's wife you want. I could kill the dance if power were given me to pass a law requiring men to dance with men and women with women. How do they dress at the dance. You call it full dress—it's a lie. It's half dress. If they dressed on the street as they do at the dance they would be arrested. If you are having dancing in your home it is a recruiting station for the brothell. There's more joy in serving Jesus Christ than you'll ever get at the dance, card table or theatre.

Rev. Mr. Annis gave a most interesting address on missions at the children's meeting yesterday afternoon. Rev. Mr. Whattam read the scripture lesson last night from the sixth chapter of second Corinthians, and in commenting upon the same said in part: I note in this chapter one thing above everything else in the Apostle's mind, and that is that God's people should give to Him their undivided service. We should do nothing contrary to the will of God. A Christian should do nothing contrary to his own good and he should do nothing contrary to the good of others. God would have us possess a life that is filled with a passion of service and to glorify Christ.

The service to-night will begin at eight o'clock.

Organization of Hamilton Machine Gun Battalion is Sanctioned

Examiner Special:

HAMILTON, Aug. 16 — Official announcement of the sanctioning by the militia council of the organization here of a machine gun battalion, the first of its kind in the British Empire, came as no surprise, the deputation which visited Ottawa shortly after the Hamilton Machine Gun Association was formed, practically receiving an assurance at the time that permission would be granted. This high honour comes to Hamilton in recognition of its splendid achievement in recruiting and donating 200 machine guns. Organization work has already been started.

Known as 86th.

The machine gun battalion will be known as the 86th, according to present indications, but it is hoped that the name will later be changed to the Hamilton Machine Gun battalion. Its organization will certainly be different from anything that exists in the Empire, if not in the world. Quite naturally, very little has yet been decided as to the definite organization and composition, except that the battalion will take the same shape as an ordinary battalion of infantry, and the men will be trained before they get the machine guns. It has not yet been decided how many guns will be supplied.

It is quite likely that the plan of organization and details will be largely left to Lieut.-Col. Labatt, and he will no doubt map out a plan that will be submitted to the authorities at Ottawa. The gun battalion will have all the officers of an ordinary battalion and the men who join both as privates and officers will be hand-picked. The command of the new gun battalion has not yet been settled, but it is understood that offers have already been made Lieut.-Col. Labatt will be connected with the battalion if his health permits.

It was explained to-day at the local recruiting depot that men taken on to this new battalion will have to be up to a very high standard.

CANADIAN DELEGATES IN ATTENDANCE

Canadian delegates figured conspicuously at the International Osteopathic Congress, which is being held here this week. Dr. H. E. Sinden, of Hamilton, Ont., was unanimously elected Second Vice-President. Dr. Elzar D. Heist of Berlin, Ont., was re-elected a member of the Board of Trustees. Dr. Philip Holliday of Montreal was elected President of the Iota Tau Sigma Alumini Association.

This is the largest and most successful convention the Osteopathic profession has yet held. There is a movement on foot to change the name of the organization from the American Osteopathic Association to the International Osteopathic Association, because of the fact that there are so many Canadian osteopaths that are members of this body. A determined effort is being made by Canadian delegates to have the convention held in some Canadian City in 1916 or '17. The last body of delegates are returning to their Eastern homes by way of Canada, and a few will make the trip to Ala-ka.

ST. JULIEN.

St. Julien—write that word
In the blood of the noble dead,
Of those gallant young Canadians,
Who so bravely fought and bled.
They were noble young Crusaders,
Yes, a brave heroic band,
Who died for King and country
And the honour of the land.

Tell me not those gallant soldiers
That now lie among the slain,
Will for ever be forgotten,
We will never see again.
They're not dead, they're only sleeping,
Waiting for the trump of God,
They have done their duty nobly,
And the holy way have trod.

Mothers, wives, and sisters dear,
Dry all your tears away;
You'll meet your loved ones by and by
On that bright eternal day.
They were true to God and country,
They did their very best,
And now from earthly warfare,
Yours loved ones are at rest.

Lindsay Post: The largest fish that has been seen around these parts for several years was caught in the Fenelon River on Sunday morning by Mr. Metcalfe, of Fenelon Falls, who was on his way to Sturgeon Point. It weighed fully twenty-five pounds. Mr. Metcalfe, after a hard fight, hauled it in over the side of his canoe. The fish was quite a drawing card at Sturgeon Point being photographed by numerous amateurs and exhibited at Lake View Inn.

Canadian Soldiers Enjoyed The Review at Shorncliffe

Division Made a Splendid Impression When Premier Borden and General Hughes Inspected Them—Function Was Kept Secret

The following special story from Mr. W. H. Curran to The Lindsay Watchman-Warder was dated at Shorncliffe, July 17th.

This day will go down in the records of the officers and men of Canada's war forces in England, as one of the big days of their lives. By the men of the Second Division it will be remembered as the most important of their soldiering prior to active warfare in France.

To-day the men of Canada's army were reviewed by Canada's Prime Minister, the Right Honorable Sir Robert L. Borden, G.C.M.G., P.C. and Canada's War Minister, Major General the Honorable Sam Hughes.

The day opened bleak. When reveille sounded at five o'clock, and the duty band struck up its morning air rain was falling out of a leaden sky. The wind howled through the trees and around the buildings. It was damp and raw and cold the sort of a day that one would naturally snuggle up against a fire if one had one's chance.

SOAKED, BUT LIKED IT

But a little thing like the weather has no effect on the splendid fellows who are serving Canada and the Empire abroad. Without the semblance of the grouch everyone went about their work with "pep," and by seven o'clock the brigades were through breakfast, and already on their way through the teaming rain to the reviewing area. Soaked? They were all soaked to the skin, but they acted as though they liked it. There was no confusion, no mistake. Everything worked like a well oiled machine. The scene when Sir Robert Borden and General Sam Hughes appeared, was one to thrill a Canadian. In the foreground the red decorations of the staff officers lent the touch of color necessary to set the scene off. A prophetic touch, with added pathos and reality to the significance of the pageant, was given by the wounded from the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital, many of whom lay on stretchers, cots, convalescent beds, invalids chairs and some of them hobbled about with the aid of crutch or cane.

A PERSONAL INTEREST

On the stroke of half-past nine, Sir Robert Borden and General Hughes, and other distinguished guests, arrived. They were received by Major-General Sam Steele and staff.

One blast of the bugle and the entire division came to the slope, a forest of khaki in a maze of shimmering blue steel bayonets. Two blasts, a kaleidoscope change, and twenty thousand rifles came to "present arms." Three trumpet blasts and with the staccato precision of a great machine the army returned to the slope. The review had commenced.

Canada's Prime Minister and Minister of Militia, accompanied by the reviewing party, proceeded to work their way through the multitudinous well done. General Sam Hughes, particularly, paid attention to every individual soldier in so far as that was possible. When the review was over the whole division felt that it had been visited by friends rather than inspected by cold blooded officials. It was this personal interest that made the review such a success from the standpoint of the rank and file. The men felt that the premier and General Sam Hughes were bestowing on them the personal attention and appreciation of the people of the Dominion.

PREMIER BORDEN'S ADDRESS

After the march past the division took the review formation. All the officers were called out and Sir Robert Borden addressed them. He told them that the people of Canada knew that they would uphold the traditions that Canadians have already established in this war. He had personally watched their development in Canada and had induced them to go to England. He trusted that the fortunes of war would be kind to them and wished them God-speed in the days of trial, which they would surely return victorious from. The cheers which punctuated his speech were taken up a la Varsity style by the men in the ranks, who cheered in sympathy in spite of the best efforts of their non-coms. to keep them quiet. General Hughes said only a few words. Cheers for the King, Sir Robert, General Sam Hughes and the Duke of Connaught, were then in order and the review was over.

"IT WAS ACTIVE SERVICE"

The men liked the review tremendously. It added a little glamour to the game of war, a bit of the glory part, which is very welcome. It gave them something to remember their training in England by. It was a typical touch of Canada, a review of Canadians by Canadians. It was different from other reviews. It was active service. The business like steel blue bayonet, like a great field of wheat, was itself impressive. The wounded added the touch of realization for those of keen imagination. The serious solicitous mien of Sir Robert Borden and General Hughes touched and pleased the boys.

The number of spectators was very limited, and the reviews were run off with such secrecy that even the people of Shorncliffe and Folkestone were not aware of what had happened until the parade proceeded through the town after the review. The townspeople gave them a rousing reception. The air was very loud of and impressed as the Canadians who have established a desirable reputation for gentlemanliness and good behavior.

Hit One and Two Others Surrendered

Sgt. Griffin of 2nd Battalion Tells of Exciting Experiences While in the Trenches

GET PLENTY TOBACCO

Mr. C. Griffin, 262 Simcoe street, has received the following letter from his brother, Sgt. W. T. Griffin, of Peterborough, who is with the 2nd Battalion, 1st Canadian Contingent, in France:

France, July 31, 1915.

My Dear Charley,—Just a few lines in answer to three of your letters, which were most welcome, indeed. Hope this finds you well, as it leaves me.

Well, Charley, we have some fun out here, some times. The other night when one of the other Canadian battalions were in the front line of trenches, they shot at a patrol of three Germans, and hit one, and the other two surrendered. Then the next night the same battalion had a post out in front of their trench and along comes a German. Well the fellow let the German come up within ten feet of him, when bang, another one is gone. That made four. The last one was an officer. I wonder if he was coming to take the trench by himself. You can bet they were out for no good purpose. However they are four less we have to fight. Still they have lots more. There's not much doing round here lately, but we never know the minute we'll be called on to make an attack. Still, that's all in the day's work. We are getting lots of both cigarettes and tobacco. So the fellows who write and say they are not getting enough tobacco must be pretty big smokers. Of course it is only the fighting line that is supplied with tobacco. Down at the base you have to buy it. Still, the men in the firing line get lots.

Remember me to all the boys in the shop and tell them to make shells as fast as they can. We need all we can get. The Germans have lots yet.

Now, Charley, I think this is all for to-day, so hoping you are all well, I will close.

Your affectionate brother,
TOM.

TOMMY'S WANTS TOBACCO

Well, here I am in the trenches,
Somewhere in blooming France,
Some times finding the blasted Huns
Lend me a merry dance.
But I tell you, boys, it's awful,
And 'taint no blooming joke,
When you haven't any tobacco,
And you're longing for a smoke.

I don't mind doing my duty,
I'll do it as long as I can,
To show all the other fellows
That I'm a fighting man
But what gets me the hardest
Takes the heart out of any bloke
Is when he hasn't any tobacco,
And is longing for a smoke.

So all you folks that's staying home,
And can't go to the front,
Just think of us boys over here
Who are bearing the battle's brunt.
And dig down into your pockets,
Even though you think you're broke
To send us lots of tobacco,
So we won't want for a smoke.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

In the evidence before us there are cases tending to show that aggravated crimes against women were sometimes severely punished. One witness reports that a young girl who was being pursued by a drunken soldier at Louvain appealed to a German officer, and that the offender was then and there shot; another describes how an officer of the 32nd Regiment of the line was let out to execution for the violation of two young girls, but reprieved at the request of with [illegible] These instances are sufficient to show that the maltreatment of women was no part of the military scheme of the invaders, however much it may appear to have been the inevitable result of the system of terror deliberately adopted in certain regions. Indeed, so much is avowed. "I asked the commander why we had been spared," says a lady in Louvain, who deposes to having suffered much brutal treatment during the sack. He said, "We will not hurt you any more. Stay in Louvain. All is finished." It was Saturday, August 29th, and the reign of terror was over. Apart from the crimes committed in special areas and belonging to a scheme of systematic reprisals for the alleged shooting of civilians, there is evidence of offences committed against women and children by individual soldiers or by small groups of soldiers, both in the advance through Belgium and France as in the retreat from the Marne. Indeed, the discipline appears to have been loose during the retreat, and there is evidence as to the burning of villages, and the murder and violation of their female inhabitants during this episode of the war.

In this tale of horrors hideous forms of mutilation occur with some frequency in the depositions, two of which may be connected in some instances with a perverted form of sexual instinct.

A third form of mutilation, the cutting of one or both hands, is frequently said to have taken place. In some cases where this form of mutilation is alleged to have occurred it may be the consequence of a cavalry charge up a village street, hacking and slashing at everything in the way; in others the victim may possibly have held a weapon, in others the motive may have been the theft of rings.

We find many well-established cases of slaughter (often accompanied by mutilation) of whole families, including not infrequently that of quite small children. In [illegible] it seems to be clear that [illegible] were made to burn the houses. These crimes were committed after the period of many weeks and sometimes months in many places, and the authorities must have known or ought to have known that cruelties of this character were being perpetrated, not even anyone doubt that they could have been stopped by swift and decisive action on the part of the heads of the German army.

The use of women and children as a screen in the presence of the Germans is referred to in a later part of [illegible] From the number of times it is mentioned it must have been commanded or acquiesced in by officers, and in some cases the [illegible] seems to have been proved. The cases of outrage sometimes under circumstances of peculiar horror and cruelty are numerous and exactly proved. We refer here to [illegible] of the many [illegible] the appendix. [illegible] the circumstances are in most instances [illegible] same. They were often accompanied with cruelty, and the slaughter of women after violation is more than once credibly attested.

It is quite possible that in some cases where the body of a Belgian or a French woman is reported as lying in the roadside pierced with bayonet wounds or hanging naked from a tree, or also as lying gashed and mutilated in a cottage kitchen or bedroom, the woman in question gave some provocation. She may by act or word have irritated her assailant, and in certain instances evidence has been [illegible] offered and as to the retribution inflicted:

(1) "Just before we got to Melen," says a witness, who had fallen into the hands of the Germans on August 5th, "I saw a woman with a child in her arms standing on the side of the road on our left-hand side watching the soldiers go by. Her name was ——, aged about sixty-three, and a neighbour of mine. The officer asked the woman for some water in good French. She went inside her room's return to get some and brought it immediately he had stopped. The officer went into the cottage garden and drank the water. The woman then said, when she saw the prisoners, 'Instead of giving you water you deserve to be shot.' The officer shouted to us, 'March.' We went on, and immediately I saw the officer draw his revolver and shoot the woman and child. One shot killed both."

(2) Two old men and one old woman refused to bake bread for the Germans. They were butchered.

(3) 23rd August. I went with two friends (names given) to see what we could see. About three hours out of Malines we were taken prisoners by a German patrol, an officer and six men, and marched off into a little wood of saplings, where there was a house. The officer spoke German. He knocked at the door; the peasant did not. The officer ordered the soldiers to break down the door, which two of them did. The peasant came and asked what they wanted them. The officer said he did not [illegible] quickly enough, and that they [illegible] up" plenty of others. His hands were tied behind his back, and he was shot at once without a moment's delay. The wife came out with a little [illegible] ling child. She put the child down, and sprang at the Germans like a lioness. She clawed their faces. One of the Germans took a rifle and struck her a tremendous blow with the butt on the head. Another took his bayonet and [illegible] it and thrust it through the child. He then put her rifle on his shoulder with the child upon it, its little arms stretched out, once or twice. The officer ordered the house to be set on fire and [illegible] was [illegible] and it was done. The man and his wife and the child were shot on the top of [illegible] There were about [illegible] prisoners, [illegible] and the officer said, 'I am about to give you a lesson and example to you. When a German tells you to do something, you must do it at once, or else you will be shot.' The prisoners were [illegible] Germans who were [illegible] Hussars with cross belts and a bath-bun on the cap.

Can anyone think that such acts as these committed by women and children as a screen are created by the [illegible] of [illegible] were [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] by [illegible] and [illegible]

New York Times Current History of the War Magazine

The August Number of The New York Times Current History has an impressive galaxy of contributors. Maurice Maeterlinck, Belgium's greatest man of letters, in the name of Belgium, brings to Poland "The Homage of a Martyred Nation to the Nation Crucified." Compton Mackenzie, the brilliant English novelist, paints a vivid picture of "Gallipoli Shambles" in an account of the military fighting now in progress at the Dardanelles. George Bernard Shaw, whose "Common Sense About the War," published in the first number of Current History, is the most widely commented on piece of literature evoked by the war, asserts that "I am the Gravest Danger" to England in a diverting and characteristically perverse statement. Friedrich Curtius, who collaborated in the preparation of the Hohenlohe Memoirs that burst on Germany like a bombshell a few years ago, discusses "The Psychology of Neutrals." Sven Hedin, the most noted Swedish explorer and writer, evidently assails the [illegible] "The Ethics of Falsehood." H. H. Asquith, Prime Minister of Great Britain, recently made a frank declaration to the British Public on the financial aspect of the war. The text of his notable speech in the Guildhall, London, is reproduced in this number. Pierre Loti, who has recently visited the battle-scarred Rheims Cathedral, describes the present condition of the scattered movement in a mournfully beautiful lament. John Galsworthy, many of whose clear-sighted articles upon the war have already appeared in Current History, in a "Note on the Principle of Nationality," contends that European only defence against the recurrence of war lies in the democratization of Germany and Austria-Hungary. William Archer, the noted English dramatic critic, pays a graceful tribute to Italy in "Encore Italia." Arnold Bennett, one of the foremost of English authors, vigorously belabours the pessimists, and he is accompanied in an article entitled "Depression, Common Sense and the Situation." He intimates that England is secretly preparing a monumental enterprise. Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, vigorously asserts the necessity of America's adequate preparedness for possible conflict. His speech at San Francisco on "American Preparedness" appears in this number of Current History. In no other publication can be found assembled the writings upon the European war of so large and impressive a group of celebrated personages as those quoted above. Yet the article from only a small part of the rich contents of the August Number of Current History, which covers interestingly, authoritatively and impartially all the phases of the great struggle in Europe.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were shattering the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

CHARGED WITH THE THEFT OF GAS

Two well known local young men were charged in police court this morning with entering the premises of the Duffus garage on Simcoe street and stealing a gallon of gasoline and a tin pail. The case was adjourned until to-morrow. The charge arose out of a common difficulty in motoring. The two, at an unconventional hour this morning, discovered the tank of their car was bare of the needed fluid. Finding no one on the job at the garage it is stated they entered and helped themselves to a gallon of gasoline. Unfortunately for them, a blue coat hove in sight as they were making their exit and after a chase the two were apprehended. Mr G N Gordon appeared for them this morning

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

NEW YORK Aug. 17 The great constructive and spiritual forces made the markets for security and the splendid crop prospects, the industrial expansion reflected in the United States Steel Corporation's statements and the great and increasing piles of money—expansion it is called by some although the term is resented by others because of the high percentage of gold held

At any rate money is easier than the traditional "call sheet" with loans on stock collaterals being made for periods extending over the turn of the year around three per cent while the Clearing House institutions of New York hold about $400,000,000 of specie in their vaults and have a surplus of $187,000,000 in excess of their legally required reserve.

Because of excessive exports of products and munitions the credit balance abroad has assumed such unprecedented proportions that European customers are busy lighting to manufacture to send us in usual volume find it difficult to pay, and the foreign exchanges are demoralized. his country, in short, is beginning to suffer from an embarrassment of riches, and unless European clients can provide gold or some good form of credit they must reduce the amount of their purchases here. The premium on the dollar as measured in foreign bills, is now so great that it adds heavily to prices of our products to European buyers and has already begun to exercise a restrictive influence upon our exports.

The Steel Trade.

The steel industry continues to improve owing to the steady demand from the belligerents for munitions, and to the betterment in general trade.

Activity and strength continues in most lines of finished products, and all the bar mills are being pressed for deliveries by shell manufacturers here and in Europe.

Since the war began contracts for 25,000,000 shells, to cost more than $500,000,000, have been placed with American manufacturers.

Russian Government agents have readjusted the contract for 100,000 tons of 67-pound rails awarded to the Cambria Steel Company two weeks ago.

Beth. Steel.

South Bethlehem, Pa., Aug. 17 Although the Bethlehem Steel Company is shipping every day 20,000 to 30,000 shells, it is believed this is an insignificant number compared to what the company and its many subsidiary concerns will be able to ship shortly, when all the plants Charles M. Schwab is adding are completed.

Mr. Schwab, it is said, is looking around for available buildings to be used for his war purposes. Rumours have it Mr. Schwab has purchased or is negotiating for the plant of the Bethlehem Silk Company and also the plant of the Moravian Community.

The engineering department drafting room has worked ahead for three years with new buildings, extensions, etc., for the local plant, and the $30,000,000 improvements to the vast ore fields Mr. Schwab has purchased in Chile

To keep the stove clean rub off all grease with newspaper while the stove is still hot. When the stove needs polishing use a paint brush, and thus avoid getting the hands soiled. You can also reach the small crevices more readily with the brush. When taking up ashes, if you dampen a newspaper and cover the ash pail you will not be troubled with ashes falling over everything.

RUSSIAN FORTRESS OF KOVNO IS REPORTED CAPTURED

TURKS LOST 27,000 IN LAST FEW DAYS' FIGHTING

Great Russian Fortress of Kovno Captured By Germans, Says Berlin

More Than Four Hundred Cannon Said to Have Been Taken---A Small Detachment of Daring Alpinists Surprise and Capture an Austrian Battery.

Special Cable to The Examiner

BERLIN, via wireless, Aug. 18.—The great Russian fortress of Kovno was captured by the Germans last night, said the official announcement today. "The fortress of Kovno together with all forts and war material not yet counted, has been in German hands since last night. More than four hundred cannon were taken. The fortress was stormed in spite of the most tenacious Russian resistance."

DARING FEATS OF ITALIANS.

ROME, Aug. 18.—Creeping single file across two great Glaciers at midnight, a small detachment of daring Alpinists scaled the snow-topped peak of Tucketspitze and surprised and captured an Austrian battery mounted on the summit. The official statement detailing this operation, given out early to-day, also reported a successful attack on two of the principal positions defending the Austrian fortress of Tolmina on the Isonzo. The Italians occupied several trenches and took 564 prisoners and many guns. The capture of Tucketspitze was one of the most brilliant feats of the Tyrolean fighting. A small body of Alpinists, with them many mountain guides, set out from Campanny Milano Monday night. The night was black but fearing destruction while crossing the ice field, the Alpinists divided into small groups, roped together to prevent disaster in one of the Glacier crevices. Camosci Glacier was first crossed, then Camosci Pass, nearly ten thousand feet above sea level. Through the pass the Alpinists made their way to the edge of Campo Glacier, and crossing without resistance climbed the steep heights of Tucketspitze, 11,354 feet in the clouds and surprised the sleeping Austrians. One group then made its way to Hinter Madalschspitze, 11,265 feet above the sea and drove the Austrians down the slopes before dawn. We have occupied Sattelbough, west of the Lange Alps, Gen. Cadorna reported. "In Monte Nero region we have captured several of the enemy's trenches, repulsing counter attacks."

KNIFE AND BOMB WARFARE

General Headquarters, British Expeditionary Force, Aug. 17. New and old are most strangely blended in the siege warfare into which the present war has developed. The Germans speak of "the war of positions," as contrasted with "the war of movement," those days that seem so far off now when they were rushing onward through Belgium towards Paris.

It is indeed a war of postings, a great game of chess in which, generally speaking, the Germans are for ever manoeuvring for the best defensive positions, while the Allies seek to gain positions which will give them the advantage of the offensive. We stand on the threshold of the epoch of war by machinery, yet in this strange warfare in Flanders are blended methods of primitive hacking, hand-to-hand grappling with knives, and the methods of the Peninsular War, the bomb and sap, which had all but passed out of our military knowledge.

The war on this front is practically a succession of sieges along a tremendously long line. Every line of trenches is in itself a series of defence work. As in the siege of a fortress the only weapon that will prevail in the first instance against these deep and well-constructed earthworks is the heavy gun firing high-explosive shell, and in the same way the shortest cut to success is a tremendous concentration of heavy fire on one particular sector to blast a path through.

This is, however, only the first stage of the operation. When the wedge has been driven in and the way cleared by the cutting of the enemy's barbed wire entanglements, the smashing in of his parapets and the annihilation of the defenders and their machine guns, the attacking artillery has to raise a curtain of fire over the approaches to the bombarded trenches to prevent the enemy from rushing in reinforcements before the assaulting infantry can occupy the position.

Under cover of this "in de barrage" curtain of fire the infantry massed in readiness for an attack, rush forward into the breach and despatch or capture the enemy survivors. This is the second stage in the operation.

The Critical Stage.

The third stage is perhaps the most important; it is certainly the most difficult. It is the moment in the fight when in the past some notable successes have been lost to us when they were pratically in our grasp. The captured position has to be consolidated, that is to say, the German trench has to be faced the other way round, the parapet heightened and the back of the parados lowered, machine guns set up and stores of bombs and ammunition brought up and placed ready for use. This work has to be done under heavy enemy bombardment and under fire from machine guns installed in emplacements previously noted as commanding trenches in the event of their being captured.

It is here that the automatic rifle would be invaluable. The machine gun is heavy and rather bulky, and the men bearing it swiftly forward to support troops holding out a heavily bombarded position are invariably picked off by the enemy. The automatic rifle, on the other hand, is light and inconspicuous and a company armed with a dozen of these should be able to silence any machine gun and hold off enemy bombers attempting to crawl down communication trenches and recapture the lost position.

The bombers' aim is to throw their bombs round the traverses and then rush round in a swift dash and finish them work with their knives or bayonets. The rifle with fixed bayonet is too long a weapon to give a man free play in those desperate encounters in narrow and slippery trenches. That is why the short knife is bound to come. The French are arming their men with it already. It is only a question of time for the British Army to do so.

Prospect of an Adjustment of the Difficulties Between the Balkan States Grow Brighter---Bulgaria May Be Short of Munitions.

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Telegraphing from Nish, Serbia the Times' Balkan correspondent promises a speedy agreement between the Balkan disputants if a conciliatory attitude on the part of Serbia will effect this.

"The prospects of an adjustment of the difficulties between the Balkan States," the correspondent says, "have grown brighter the past few days. So far from the attitude of the Serbian Government being irreconcilable, assurances have been given which make it evident that the way is open for a quick settlement. This, however, will be more of a general character than a mere rectification of frontiers in one particular locality."

BULGARIA SHORT OF SHELLS.

The key to the Balkan situation may lie in a shortage of ammunition in Bulgaria, suggests the Daily Mail, in an article which deals with "Germany's anxiety to ship ammunition to that country."

In support of this view the Daily Mail cites the alleged statement of the German military attache at Bucharest who, in pleading with Rumania to allow munitions to pass through that country, declared that these were not intended for Turkey but destined for Bulgaria, which was neutral.

Rumania, the article continues, replied that she had no guarantees that the munitions would not reach Turkey in whole or in part and that while Germany apparently was able to spare munitions to Bulgaria she was unable to send to Rumania the war stores Rumania had bought and paid for.

The conclusion of the Daily Mail is that Bulgaria has depleted her arsenals in favour of some other power and now finds it necessary to replenish them.

"The Austrian concentration at Orsova, less than forty miles distant from the Bulgarian frontier indicates a determination to force a route in the event of Rumania's refusal to permit muntions to pass through" the article says in conclusion.

HORTICULTURAL HINTS

USUALLY at this time of the year sweet peas require plenty of water.

A new strawberry bed may be set early this month if the weather is not too dry.

One of the best all-year plants for the hardy border is the hardy carnation. It requires little attention.

As fast as the flowers of shrubs and perennials fade remove them and let the strength that would go into the seed go into the foliage.

There are few flowers that will stand poor soil and lack of attention better than nasturtiums. They come in a variety of colors in flower and foliage now.

When watering the lawn, shrubs or plants do a thorough job. Be sure the soil is moist clear to the rot tips. Then don't water again till the plants need water.

Most perennials may be sown now in pots or boxes or in the open ground seed bed. Transplant as soon as large enough, to flats or beds. They should be protected by a cold frame over the winter and set in the permanent beds in the spring.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

The man from Paris was prejudiced again' me and everything I said made him wrathy. While he was chokin' and glarin' at me the noise at the corrals died away and we heard the shrill voice of Flames pipin' out his notion of the quickest way to stir up matters into a real disturbance. "Hey, don't turn your hosses loose," he shouted. "There's a flock o' damn deputy marshals taken possession of the house and they're goin' to burn it down."

Then we heard the boys swoopin' up to the house and they didn't pay any heed to haltin' orders; but burst right in. They were dusty and bedraggled; but their eyes still held the snap of stiff work, and they were a mighty welcome sight; but right after them a squad o' rangers, eight of 'em under a quiet man with gray eyes, and this sure put a damper on me. The minute I looked at this man, I saw he was of an altogether different breed from the bunch I'd been foolin' with and I reckon I prayed that Tom Smith had managed to find a hoss.

The man from Paris began to tell his troubles in whumpery excitement and I slipped into the north room and out the window. I stole around to the front porch where I found Flames tryin' to wedge himself inside, and I grabbed him by the scruff o' the neck and headed for a thicket where I made him whisper all he knew. He said the posse had put all their hosses and Starlight, too, into the stallion stable under a one-man guard, and had turned the rest of our stuff loose. That after findin' the hoss gone, Tom Smith had scouted about for some time tryin' to locate a mount, and had then discarded the Begum's dress and had started in the direction of the hermit's on foot, with the four strangers sneakin' along on his flanks.

I had to have a hoss right now, for I told Tom Smith about Kate comin' to meet him at the head of the draw; but a couple o' rangers were lookin' after their own mounts and also those of our crowd. "Where's Monody?" sez I.

"Well," sez Flames, hangin' fire noticeable, "I finally did manage to get him to do somethin'. I told him you didn't want any noise or fuss but that you wanted the feller guardin' the stallion stable took care of, and he's got him tied and gagged."

"I may lick you, yet," sez I to Flames, "unless everything turns out well; so you'd better stick right tight to me and if you want your skin to continue to fit you as well as it does now, don't let me have to speak to you more than once."

We ran our best to the stallion barn and old Hellion was rejoiced to sniff me again. Flames said he had carried on some at first but he was shut into a box stall and so had finally settled down in disgust. Monody oozed out of a shadow as soon as he found out who I was and I told him he'd better not do any braggin' about hivin' up the man-hunter, though it was a great favour to me. I told him I was headed for old Josiah's but not to let any outsiders know of it, and then I flung Flames' saddle onto the paint pony which was right at the cars, swung him into it, flopped myself onto Starlight, and we headed in the direction of old Josiah's.

We rode cautious at first and then more free until finally the hosses were purty well stretched out.

"What are we goin' to do?" asked Flames, tryin' to keep his voice down to where it would rumble instead of squeak.

"You and I are goin' to do entirely different things," sez I, thinkin' it best to have all the hobbles and clogs on him I could yet. "I'm goin' to do my duty as I see it, and you're goin' to do what I blame well tell you to, and nothin' else."

"Humph!" sez Flames, through his nose.

CHAPTER FORTY-FOUR.
The Get-Away.

It was a clear night with the moon well to the west and finally I made out a group some distance off and just at the head of the draw, so I made Flames turn and ride back at a walk to keep watch to see if we were followed; after which I stole up to the group leadin' Starlight and steppin' easy. The minute I got to where I could hear their voices, I froze in my tracks and listened.

Belle Stern was speakin' and her voice was steady though mighty earnest. "But you've got to take my hoss," sez she, as though her patience was beginnin' to feel the strain. "You don't stand a ghost of a show of gettin' away on foot, and after all you've gone through, you surely are not goin' to throw up your hands like a coward."

"I can't take the hoss," sez Tom Smith, speakin' slow but mighty obstinate.

"You make him take it," cried Belle.

"It seems the only way," sez Kate in a low tone.

"Oh, take it, Kid," sez Belle; "all I want is for you to get away. If you just get clear away, I never intend to see or speak to you again. You take my hoss, and I can ride behind Bud. They are not after us and we can circle back to the canon. Don't wait, every minute counts. Come, up with you!"

"I'm mightily obliged; I can't tell you how much I feel this," sez Tom Smith, "but I just can't take your hoss, and that's all there is to it."

"Well, I got a couple o' hosses here," sez I, out of the night. "Will you take mine?"

They got ready for action like clockwork; but Tom Smith answered pronto, in a tone of relief. "You bet I'll take yours."

I started to join 'em and was just about to whistle low to Flames when I caught the sound of a hoof strikin' a stone and I whispered, "Hush!"

In a minute Flames rode up to me and sez that a bunch of riders were comin' after us, spread out and ridin' cautious. We shipped into the draw, and for a moment we all stood still, and then Belle Stern reached up and peeled off her false moustache, flung it to the ground and her slouch hat on top of it. She tore open her collar to make her throat stand out, ran her fingers through her hair, tossin' up the short curls and even in the shadow, a feller could tell her for a woman as far as he could see a hoss.

"I'm not doin' this for you," sez she defiant to Tom Smith, "nor yet for you" — sez she to Kate. "I'm doin' it because I'm still a woman and I have to do something. Bronco is about your size and we'll sure fool 'em. Save yourself, Kid, and good luck to you."

"You can't put this on me," sez Tom Smith sternly, grabbin' hold of her. "I won't stand for it."

For a second he held her and in the silence, we once more heard the click of a hoof again' a stone.

"Bill, Bud," sez Belle Stern, in a glad, wild voice, "now's the time!"

They were close behind Tom Smith and they sure grabbed him neat, and Bill, who was a big man, covered his mouth with a hand like a ham.

Belle put her face close up to Tom Smith's and her voice was full of hurrah, but there was an undertone of tenderness in it, too: "Play the game, clear out, Kid," sez she. "They haven't anything to touch our hosses, and we'll coax 'em till their ponies can't wiggle another step. Come, Bronco."

Tom Smith writhed and twisted but they held him tight. Belle and Bronco swung into their saddles and out and away to the south, beatin' their boots with their quirts to attract attention but riding light and easy so as to lure the posse into trying for a quick dash and a short.

The hunters gave shouts as they caught a glimpse of 'em in the full moonlight of the open range, and those at the south of the line had to cut north to circle the head of the draw where we were hidin', but none of 'em caught sight of us, they were so intent on the game ahead.

As soon as the night had swallowed up all sights and sounds, Bill Stern and Bud turned Tom Smith loose, and Bill said apologetical: "You know we were mighty sorry to do this, Kid; but we're takin' orders from her now."

"Boys," sez Tom Smith, in a hurt voice, "I don't blame you none, and I don't blame her. She's got more heart and more grit 'n this whole gang had when I joined it — but she's put shame on me by this night's work, and you never should have humored her. I'm much obliged to ya for your intentions, but hanged if I'm grateful for bein' sheltered behind a woman's skirts."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Romance of a Broken Nose

How a Dream Turned Out a Reality

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Howard Chichester stood at his club window looking out on a street along which now and again some pedestrian was forcing his way against wind and rain. Mr. Chichester was depressed and the sight from the window did not tend to raise his spirits. His club was supposed to be a home for bachelors, but it was a great stone structure, its interior faced with marble and during the day usually deserted.

Mr. Chichester thought how pleasant a real home would be on such a day as this. He pictured himself coming home from business, met at the door by a loving wife with a kiss, divesting himself of wet clothing and sitting down before a cheerful fire in his library, his wife on the arm of his easy chair listening to a recital of the events of the day.

A gust of wind changed a woman's umbrella from concave to convex and sent a man's hat rolling over the wet pavement. Chichester turned away from the scene contrasting so widely with his dream of a home, and to escape it he went into the billiard room. There was no one there to play with, so after knocking the balls about for a few minutes he started out into the storm to go to his room to dress for dinner.

The wind sent the rain almost parallel with the sidewalk, so instead of holding his umbrella over his head he held it before his face. Suddenly he felt a shock and heard a scream. Raising his umbrella he saw a girl directly in front of him from whose nose blood was running. It occurred to him that he had drawn that blood with the stick of his umbrella.

It was time to talk, but to act, though Chichester gave vent to two words. "Thousand pardons," as he whipped out his handkerchief to supply the place of the one used by the girl, which resembled a dolly rather than a blood stanicher. She seized the one he offered her greedily and held it to her nose.

A cab was passing, and Chichester hailed it. Fortunately it was empty, and the driver was ready for a fare. He drew up by the curb. Chichester, opening the door, said to the lady:

"I beg of you to permit me to do what I can to atone for my carelessness by taking you home."

The girl removed the handkerchief from her face, saw that her nose was still bleeding, hesitated, then got into the cab. Chichester asked for her street and number, then, giving it to the driver, got in and sat down beside her. On the way he bemoaned having injured her and hoped that there would be no ill result. The girl said very little and when they reached her home and he handed her out was in no state of mind to thank him for his attention. Nevertheless — followed her to the door and into the house, where she was received by her mother, who naturally showed great anxiety to know what had happened.

Inviting Chichester to a little parlor, the mother went upstairs with her daughter and presently returned with the report that the hemorrhage had ceased, but she had decided to call in a doctor to make sure that all was right. Chichester asked if he might remain to hear the doctor's report and was granted his request. A telephone message was sent for the family physician, who arrived in due time and went upstairs to the patient.

Meanwhile Chichester remained in the cozy room to which he had been shown. A cheerful fire was burning on the hearth, and some one had been sitting in an easy chair directly before it, for such was the position of the chair. Chichester dropped into it, and presently his mind became diverted from the damage he had done to his immediate surroundings.

The room was very tastefully furnished. Indeed, there was an air of comfort about it which is in some rooms and not in others, why, it is hard to tell. On the wall were pictures, all works of art, one of which was a portrait of a young girl evidently about fifteen, which Chichester recognized at once for a likeness of the girl he had injured, though it must have been painted several years before. His attention was fixed on the nose, which was very shapely. He winced as he thought that he might have made it a defacement instead of a thing of beauty.

Chichester sat musing. He recalled the dream that had come to him while looking out of his window at his club, when he had pictured himself coming in out of the rain received by a wife, her sitting beside him on the arm of his chair and their talking over the events of the day. He now fancied the girl stepping out of the picture and taking the place of the wife of his dream. True, she was but a chit, but he had seen her as a woman, and it was not difficult to realize the two as one and the same person. Would that his fancy could become real! He would shake the dust of his club off his boots.

There was the tread of a man's step on the stairs, and the doctor entered the room where Chichester sat. He looked grave. Chichester rose and faced him.

"Mrs. Corwith," said the physician, "has asked me to report to you her daughter's condition. The vertical septum separating the nasal fossae has been fractured"—

"Great heavens, doctor! You don't mean that her nose has been broken."

"That's about it, in ordinary parlance."

"And will it be deformed?" asked Chichester eagerly.

"That it is impossible to say. The surgical problem is rather a difficult one to handle. The septum is very thin, and once put out of its normal position there is no surety of getting it back so exactly as to replace the original shape of the organ."

Chichester groaned.

"Of course," continued the doctor, "everything will be done that can be done to prevent disfigurement. I am not a surgeon, but one of the best operators in the profession will have charge of the case, and we may hope for the best."

With this the doctor took himself off, swinging his satchel in true professional style, and Chichester was left alone with his regrets at having protected himself from the rain at the expense of a collision to some one's injury. Soon after the doctor's departure Mrs. Corwith came into the room, where Chichester still waited, and said:

"My daughter has charged me to say to you that you need give yourself no concern on her account. Her injury was an accident for which you were in no way to blame. When she met you the rain was dripping from her umbrella into her eyes, and she had lowered the umbrella on that account, so that she did not see you coming."

"It was my fault entirely," Chichester protested. "I had no right to be walking on the street, my eyesight obstructed and pointing a steel fireside at whoever might approach."

"I may call, may I not, to ask of her condition?"

"Surely, if you are so inclined."

Chichester drew a card from his portemonnaie and placed it on a table, begging the lady if complications set in to advise him. This she promised to do.

Chichester called the next day and learned that an operation had been performed on Miss Corwith's nose and that there was every expectation that it would result in a complete restoration of the feature to its original shape. He asked permission to send some flowers to the young lady as a token of his delight at the prospect of the damage he had done being remedied. Mrs. Corwith assured him that such a gift would be appreciated, and the same day a box of cut flowers arrived, with Mr. Chichester's card.

Mr. Chichester called every few days for information concerning the patient's condition, and every time he called he was shown into the cozy little parlor to await a reply to his inquiries. Sometimes the answer was slow in coming, and he was much pleased thereat, for it gave him time to sniff the comfort of the room and to feast his eyes on the girlish face which always seemed to look down on him forgivingly for the damage he had done.

At times the answers to his inquiries were brought him by the maid, but at others Mrs. Corwith made the replies in person. Having Mr. Chichester's card, she had spoken to friends about his connection with her daughter's accident and had learned that he was a gentleman of excellent family. From the time of receiving this information her manner became more cordial, and one day when he called she assured him the doctors had promised that the bandages would be removed from her daughter's nose within a few days, and he would have an opportunity to see for himself that no permanent damage had been done.

One afternoon about 4 o'clock Chichester sauntered up to the Corwith residence, rang the doorbell and was admitted to the cozy parlor. Some of the flowers he had sent the day before were arranged in vases about the room, thus enhancing its attractiveness. Chichester looked upon this as a good omen. The portrait looked down upon him, and it seemed to him today that instead of wearing a forgiving expression there was one of kindliness. He was standing before it with his back to the door when he heard a light footstep on the threshold and, turning, there stood Miss Corwith.

For an instant his eyes were riveted on her nose and, seeing that there was no disfigurement, he exclaimed, "Thank God!" Her face broke into an appreciative smile and she advanced with outstretched hand.

"You have been very good," she said "to manifest so much concern in my behalf. It is in great contrast with those reckless drivers who run down persons and leave them lying where they fall while the rascals make their escape."

"My happiness at your restoration is complete," was Chichester's reply.

"And the flowers you have sent me; they have been such a comfort to me. I love flowers, and while confined to my room they have been my principal companions."

Taking a rose from a vase, she placed it in Chichester's buttonhole.

Now, when a lady puts a flower in the lapel of a man's coat she must, of necessity, stand very near him. He looks down into her face and her breath is sweet to him. Chichester found it difficult to refrain from encircling the donor with his arms.

A time came, however, when he reached home from business, sat in the easy chair in the cozy parlor and a wife sat on its arm while they talked over the events of the day. At such moments Chichester went back in memory to the day he stood a lonely bachelor at his club window, looked out on the driven rain and pictured himself in a home with a wife, then went forth to be conducted by fate to a real home and a real wife, Ada Corwith.

LOSING A GOLF MATCH.

Just a Little Lack of Concentration Once Defeated Travers.

Writing on golf in the American Magazine, Jerome D. Travers suggests that lack of concentration, particularly with reference to keeping one's eye on the ball, is the greatest cause of bad golf playing. He says that to practice concentration is very difficult, as he knows from personal experience. He then tells the following story showing how he lost a great match through this fault:

"I know how hard this practice is. I have always thought that but for breaking this cardinal precept I might have had a very good chance to beat Hilton in 1911 at Apawamis—when the English champion carried away our chief amateur trophy.

"In the morning round over the first eighteen holes I had been playing badly and finished four down. Every one, including Hilton, considered the match all in and over. But in the afternoon I started with a rush and won the first three holes, leaving myself only one down and well within reach. At the next hole I had an easy two foot putt to make to win my fourth straight hole and square the match.

"I have always thought that if I had made that putt the odds would have been in my favor. Now, in putting I make it a set rule to look at the ball until my club has struck the spot I am looking at. I have been able to do this by constant practice of concentration. But on this occasion I had a down hill putt, and I was overanxious. And just before my club struck the ball I looked up, pushed the ball to the right of the cup and missed the shot. This upset me for a moment, and I topped my drive at the next hole, losing it. The combination, coming suddenly, restored Hilton's confidence, which had been ebbing away, and he got going again, with the result that I was beaten three and two."

WOMEN OF RUSSIA

Petrograd, Aug. 17—As the war continues the women on the border suffer the horrors of war and the mothers and orphans left at home are the ones who suffer most. In America are many mothers and daughters, who were left penniless by the war of the Rebellion, but their suffering is as nothing to the women and children left as widows and orphans of the soldiers who have fought and bled for their country in Europe.

Many a mother and daughter have reason to be thankful to Dr Pierce for relief from suffering and the cure of those weaknesses of their sex, because of his "Favourite Prescription." This tonic, which is strictly a temperance medicine, has cured thousands of those weaknesses, headaches, nervousness, backaches, which are the outward manifestations of disease in women. Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear, removes pain and misery and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared only from nature's roots and herbs with no alcohol to falsely stimulate and no narcotics to wreck the nerves. It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, dragging-down sensations, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

What Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has done for thousands it will do for you. It's not a secret remedy for its ingredients are printed on wrapper. Get it this very day at any medicine dealers in either liquid or tablet form.

Dr Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy. Adv.

His Last Look.

A church in the north of Scotland requiring a pastor had a beadle who took an active interest in all that concerned the church. One of the candidates after the last service for the day was over stepped into the vestry to put off his gown. He thought he would have a look at the church and, meeting the worthy beadle putting things to rights, said:

An American once went to Windsor castle and insisted upon seeing Queen Victoria. He was told that it was quite impossible; as an audience with the Queen could be had only by appointment. The Suspension Bridge.

There is no doubt that the first idea of a suspension bridge was suggested to primitive man by the interlacing of tree branches and parasitical plants across rivers. Probably monkeys used them before men did. In very mountainous countries, such as Tibet and Peru, they have apparently been used since the dawn of history, possibly earlier.

Glazed Eyes.

Snakes may almost be said to have glass eyes, inasmuch as their eyes never close. They are without lids, and each is covered with a transparent scale resembling glass. When the reptile casts its outer skin the eye scales come off with the rest of the transparent envelope out of which the snake slips.

This glassy eye scale is so tough that it effectually protects the true eye from the twigs, sharp grass and other obstructions which the snake encounters in its travels, yet it is transparent enough to allow the most perfect vision. Thus if the snake has not a glass eye it may at any rate be said to wear eyeglasses.

Sikh's Death Disk.

Around the "point" of their turbans the Sikh warriors carry a steel weapon which looks very much like an ordinary quoit, but is called a "chakkar." This quoit has an edge like a razor, and the Sikhs throw it by twirling it round the finger, and then suddenly releasing it. The weapon flies through the air revolving horizontally, and inflicts a terrible wound on any one it strikes. At a distance of twelve yards one of these "chakkars," in the hands of an expert, has been known to cut a two inch bamboo cane completely in two. Obviously, the safest place in which this weapon could possibly be carried is on the top of the turban, where it is out of the way.—London Tit-Bits.

Plants That Mimic Stones.

In South Africa there is found a plant of the genus Mesembryanthemum, growing on stony ground, which so closely resembles a pebble that it is invariably taken by the stranger to be a stone.

Another species of the same plant growing on the hills round the Karoo produces two leaves about as large as ducks' eggs, having a surface resembling weathered stone of brownish gray color, tinged with green. These plants look like stones, but for a short time they put forth bright yellow flowers. Still another species of the same plant resembles the quartz pebbles among which it grows.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A NEW IDEA FOR BORDERED FABRICS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This is a season of bordered goods and of embroidered materials, and both these demand a skirt with a straight lower edge. Other ideas present themselves which develop prettily in these same materials and hence the design shown in the accompanying illustration.

The blouse is most unusual, having the immediate front gathered into the girdle, while the backward half of it extends below the girdle, somewhat in the manner of a jacket. The back is plain, but there is a band which extends from the side seam around the back of the waist as a shaped peplum. This gives very much the coat effect which is so popular at present.

The skirt is of course in one piece, except for such seams as the material requires. It has the fulness of the upper part arranged in two small box pleats in front and in similar pleats in the back. The high or the regulation waist line may be used in making.

Very often it is difficult to find flouncing or bordered goods quite as wide as one might wish, and when this is the case the lower part of the skirt may be pieced under the edges of the border. Ordinarily, however, there will not be this trouble, and the material may hang in one width from waist to hem. Of course, there is no need of confining oneself to bordered materials, for plain goods, taffeta, voile, gabardine and the like are all appropriate.

The pattern of this dress, No. 7226, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 4½ yards of 45 inch bordered material, 0⅝ yards of velvet ribbon, 1½ yards of lace edging.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

She was hard-working withal and seemed never to reach the end of her daily labor. On a certain day Mrs. Castle, one of the "light housekeepers," finding a surplus of time on her hands, kindly offered to help Mrs. Fifer out with her overflow of work.

"Well, if you feel like it, I wouldn't care if you'd take hold and bake me up a couple of pies," Mrs. Fifer conceded. "That'll help me a lot. There's a bowl of apple sauce that I'm afraid won't keep if it ain't used soon."

After Mrs. Castle had begun work Mrs. Fifer appeared with a supplementary suggestion.

"While you're about it," said she, "mebby you wouldn't mind baking four pies. 'Twon't take any more coal to bake four than two, and that'll be a saving. You can make the filling hold out by having lots of juice to it."

Mrs. Castle agreed to the amendment and worked away industriously until her task was accomplished, when, wearied with her labors, she retired to her own apartment.

In a short time Mrs. Fifer's small daughter, Peggy, appeared at her door.

"Ma says," reported Peggy, "that she don't b'lieve she'll be able to use all them four pies before they dry out, and she wants to know if you won't buy two of 'em off her for 20 cents, and she'd like the 20 cents right away, please."

Mrs. Castle bought the pies, observing to herself with a dry smile, "She might have let me have two for 15 cents—considering."—Youth's Companion.

Advice to Stage Villain.

"Don't go down to the scene of your crime in the last act," says Jerome K. Jerome. "You always will do this. We suppose it is some extra cheap excursion down there that attracts you. But you take our advice and don't you go. That is always where you get nabbed. The police know your habits from experience. They do not trouble to look for you. They go down in the last act to the old hall or the ruined mill, where you did the deed and wait for you. In nine cases out of ten you would get off scot free but for this idiotic custom of yours."—London Standard.

When the Day Starts.

The beginning of the day is not a question of universal agreement. It has been arbitrarily decided by different peoples from time to time. The ancient Jews fixed the beginning of the day at sunrise, with the Umbrians it began at noon, and the Egyptians and Romans fixed the time at midnight, a custom adopted by the United States and by most of the European countries.

Chaos of Bricklayers.

Bricklayers believe it unlucky to lay the top brick at the south corner of a building. Some of them would lose a day's pay rather than imperil their future by doing such a piece of work.

A bricklayer often bricks up in the hollow of a wall a horseshoe with a cent tied to it. This he does for good luck.

The Child of Today.

Children should always eat with their parents, for the good effect upon their manners. There is nothing in that old rule which said that children in the company of their elders should be seen and not heard. On the contrary, the conversation at the family table should be such that the children may join in it, and it should be gay and cheerful in tone. Laughter is good for the digestion. A cheerful, happy environment is as essential to the health of children, even babies, as sunshine to flowers. Their nerves as well as their digestion suffer in an atmosphere of depression and gloom.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Devil's Own.

The Inns of Court Officers' training corps is proud of its traditional name, the Devil's Own, a title which links it with the patriots of the four inns, who formed a volunteer corps in the time of the Napoleonic wars. It was George III. who bestowed the title on the corps. He was reviewing bands of volunteers, and as one particularly smart body of men passed before him asked who they were. "Lawyers," was the reply. "The devil's own, the devil's own," said the old king, who had a habit of repeating his phrases. And the lawyers, who had a sense of humor, adopted the title with glee.—London Chronicle.

Hypnotism.

Hypnotism has attracted less attention in England than in most other countries, though the name of hypnotism was first applied to the science by an Englishman, James Braid, a surgeon of Manchester. This was in 1841. But sixty years before that Mesmer had met with great success in Paris, a commission of investigation, including such eminent people as Benjamin Franklin, having to admit many of his facts, while denying his explanation of them. Charlatans brought mesmerism into disrepute for a time, but the Paris Academy of Medicine reported favorably on it in 1831, and at last, in 1892, the British Medical association gave it its approval.—London Opinion.

Never Learned How to Live.

There are people who go through life looking for slights, and they are necessarily miserable, for they find grievances everywhere. One has the same pity for such men as for the very poor. They are the morally illiterate. They have had no real education, for they have never learned how to live.

Hedgehogs.

Hedgehogs are very strong in the water, swimming with ease against a rapid stream, and with their muscular claws they turn up the nests of trout or salmon and make a goodly haul therefrom. They will breast a very rapid stream and cold water, as near the freezing point as may be, seems to have no terror for them.

The Flag at Half Mast.

The custom of showing the flag at half mast originated from the way at sea of showing the pre-eminence one ship had over the other in time of warfare. The vanquished always had to lower its flag while the victor's would be raised as high as possible in exultation. To lower a flag is an act of submission or betokens respect to a superior or is a signal of distress. The hoisting of a flag half mast high came to be used therefore, as a sign of mourning and respect.

It Ruins Hair to Wash It With Soap

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes it hard, brittle and faded.

The best thing for shampooing is pure cocoanut oil, which is pure and greaseless and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly and it leaves the scalp soft and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy. It is very cheap and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY AT KOVNO
ANOTHER ADVANCE AT THE DARDANELLES

A German Advance on Vilna is Now Expected

Some at Least of the Kovno Forts Have Fallen---Russians Say Germans Have Sustained Frightful Losses in Their Attacks on Fortress--Huge Gaps Being Torn in Their Ranks As They Advance.

ALLIES GAIN AT THE DARDANELLES

Special Cable to The Examiner

PETROGRAD, Aug. 18.—The Germans have began a violent assault upon the fortress of Kovno. The War Office admitted to-day that the enemy have captured one small fort, and declared that desperate fighting continues.

German siege artillery of all calibre and Austrian howitzers have been pounding at the western and south-western forts of Kovno since early morning. The Teutons have lost heavily in massed assaults. Great gaps were torn in the ranks of General Von Eichorn's army when the German threw themselves in close formation on the positions facing Kovno from the southwest.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The fall of the Russian forts on the south-west side of Kovno marked the situation of that fortress as critical, and its ultimate surrender was expected here. The Russian armies apparently have not been able to reorganize sufficiently to check the [illegible] but are holding resolutely against the ring of strong fortresses which form the outer defence to the Petrograd provinces.

Kovno was the stronghold that barred the German advance on Vilna on the Warsaw-Petrograd railway, the immediate objective of Von Hindenburg's drive in the north. Vilna lies 57 miles east of Kovno, and without adequate fortifications it is not believed possible by the German military men that it can resist capture by Von Hindenburg's armies. The capture of Vilna, and with it important railways radiating throughout North-West Russia, is expected within a fortnight. The civilian population began evacuating the city ten days ago.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The British reinforcements which landed on the shores of Suvli Bay have gained five hundred yards in a general assault in the Turkish Dardanelles defences, General Hamilton reported to the War Office to-day.

In the northern zone the right flank of the Australian and New Zealand army corps' position was heavily attacked during the night of the 14-15, but all attacks were repulsed. At Suvla the troops on the left flank made a short advance on the afternoon of the 15th with a view to straightening out the line. They moved forward under considerable gun and rifle fire, and gained about 500 yards, capturing a Turkish trench and taking two officers and twenty other prisoners.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—This is the third air raid by Zeppelins on the East Coast within eight days, and the seventeenth air invasion of England since the war began. A total of 85 persons have been killed by bombs dropped from German aircraft over England, and 207 persons have been injured.

The afternoon's official statement, the third issued following the previous air attacks, contained no mention of the localities raided.

The official statement said: "The eastern counties were raided." This was taken to mean that Kent and Essex, lying directly east of London, in which the eastern suburbs of London are located, were visited by the Zeppelins.

"Zeppelins visited the eastern counties last night and dropped bombs," said the Admiralty statement. "Our anti-aircraft guns were in action, and it is believed one Zeppelin was hit. Some houses and other buildings, including a church, were damaged. The dead include seven men, two women and one child. The injured were fifteen men, eighteen women and three children. All the victims were civilians."

BERLIN (via wireless), Aug. 18.—The Post Office at Harwich was badly damaged in the recent Zeppelin raid on the English East Coast, according to information reaching here to-day. Travellers arriving in Holland report heavy explosions were heard at several points along the coast, but that the authorities took great care to suppress news of damage. Seventeen persons were wounded, according to Holland advices, and the exact number of killed is not known.

ROME, Aug. 18.—Twenty Austrian warships and one aeroplane yesterday attacked the Italian positions on the Island of Pelagosa in the Adriatic but were repulsed by the Italian artillery. The Italians lost four killed.

GERMANY'S TERMS OF PEACE.

BERLIN (via wireless), Aug. 18.—The Executive Committee of the National Liberal party, meeting to-day in advance of the opening of the Reichstag, passed a resolution demanding that Germany only agree to peace that will guarantee for both from a military and economic standpoint from fresh attacks in the immediate future.

BERLIN, Aug. 18.—The fortress of Novo Georgievsk is about to fall. German troops have stormed and captured two more of the fortress's outlying forts, and the capitulation of Novo Georgievsk is expected.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The Norwegian steamers Mercia and Rio [illegible] have been sunk by German submarines. Despatches received here to-day said that crews were rescued.

TWO MORE SHIPS SUNK.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The British steamer Benny, of 2,702 tons gross, and the Spanish steamer Isidore, 2,043 tons, have been sunk. Twenty-one of the crew of the former vessel and eight of the latter were picked up. The trawler "George" also was sunk. Her crew was saved.

ONE DAY'S MAKE OF CHEESE FOR PATRIOTIC FUND

Peterborough Cheese Board Decide to Follow Last Year's Action In Giving One Day for Patriotic Purposes

THIS MORNING'S SALE

To give one day's make of cheese for patriotic purposes, as was done a year ago, was the decision of the Peterborough Cheese Board this morning at their regular meeting. The President, Mr. Doll, was in the chair, and the buyers present were Messrs. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Thompson, [illegible]

Lieut. G. K. Rackham of the 59th Battalion, was present and addressed the Board in regard to making a donation to the recruiting fund. He spoke of the need of a fund for the supplying of such comforts for the men as were not supplied by the government. He would be pleased if the Board could see its way clear to make a donation to the fund.

Following Lieut. Rackham's remarks, a discussion took place in regard to what would be the Board's action. Two of the salesmen stated that their patrons were opposed to giving one day's milk for patriotic purposes, believing that any contribution should come through the township as a whole and not individually. However, on motion of Mr. Switzer and seconded by Mr. Mann, it was decided that both the cheese and butter factories donate one day's milk, namely, by Wednesday, September the first, to the patriotic fund, and any patrons who did not care to do so will keep them quiet at home that day.

The Sale of Cheese.

The following factories boarded cheese: Keene 75, Warminster 80, Sherbrooke 140, Selwyn 95, Villiers 70, Warsaw 90, Westwood 150, Oakdale 80, Davey D. 65, Pine Grove 40, Mount Pleasant 80, Omemee 100, Young's Point 80, Lang 100, Indian River 80, Lakefield 100, Emily 100, Trewerin 105, Norwood 140, Evertwood 85, Kidderley 80, Total 1,421.

Twelve and one-quarter cents was the price paid for cheese this morning. Mr. Kerr getting all the above factories with the exception of Fleetwood and Selwyn, which were taken by Mr. Gillespie at the same figure.

Was Caught in Machinery and Instantly Killed

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 18.—A sad accident occurred here Monday evening, by which Mr. Peter Cole, aged nineteen, employed in the planing mill of Marmora Iron Works, got caught in the machinery and was instantly killed. He was dragged into the machinery and was instantly killed. He was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dewey. The funeral will take place [illegible]

Why They Don't Enlist

A number of Peterborough men [illegible] who have been canvassed by the recruiting sergeants and the cards have been returned to the recruiting officer. In each case the young man was asked to state their reasons for not enlisting. Some of the replies are worthy of note. One man writes: "Won't go until I have to." Another: "I'll have to be escorted," and another: "Not me, thanks." One man of the canvassed, evidently a Britisher, writes: "I am too much of a real Canadian to go," and another just as evident a Canadian, writes to the following: "When all the Englishmen have gone I will go." Failure to obtain the consent of wife or mother is the reason most often given, although "Can't leave business" is another frequently found on the cards. "Don't think I am needed yet," is the way one young man looks at the proposition.

MORE ARTILLERY RECRUITS TO LEAVE TO-MORROW MORNING

Another Draft From the 24th Field Battery off to Barriefield Camp---Infantry Recruits Will Not Leave To-morrow as Was Expected---Order Comes to Have Them Stay Here.

Another draft for the new overseas artillery battery at Barriefield will leave to-morrow morning on the 8.10 G.T.R. train making the second quota from the 24th Field Battery to leave this week. [illegible] will consist of about a dozen men, not all of those accepted being able to go to-morrow. A number are still in the hospital. The squad leaving to-morrow will include Alf. Hagerman, second-baseman of the East City Ball Club, and Harry Carr, Secretary of the City Ball League. They will fall in at the Armouries at 7.30 and will be escorted to the G.T.R. station by the band of the 59th, and the infantry recruits.

It was expected that the local infantry recruits would leave for Barriefield Camp to-morrow morning to join the 59th Battalion, but this morning Lt.-Col. Walker received a wire from Col. Henning commanding the 3rd Division, ordering him to hold all infantry recruits until further notice. All but three of the recruits this morning expressed their desire to join the 59th Battalion at Kingston in preference to the 77th Battalion at Ottawa.

Sergt. Instructor Spence of the instructional staff at Barriefield camp is home for a few days on leave, and was a visitor at the armouries to-day.

Artillery Arrives.

Mr. W. R. Mills has received a cable from his son Lieut. Mills, saying that he arrived at Plymouth on the transport Megantic which carried a number of Canadian batteries. Mr. Mills son, Lieut. F. W. Mills, was in the 1st Battery and is now Lieut. Harold Smith, also of Peterborough. The Megantic also carried the 25th Battery in command of Major G. R. Hall of Peterborough. Lieut. Hebart of Peterborough is with the same unit, as is also a large number of Peterborough men. The news that they have safely arrived will be welcome.

No Consent Needed.

The local militia authorities not having been officially informed of the change in the regulations in regard to the consent of wives and mothers, Mr. H. H. Burkholme, M.P., wired a telegram to the Acting Minister of Militia at Ottawa. He received the following reply:

Regarding the consent of parents and wives the regulation has been rescinded. Circulars were sent out on the 11th of August to all concerned.

J. B. Mann, son of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Mann, Bridgenorth, has enlisted for active service with the 19th Lincoln Regiment, St. Catharines.

Sergt. Maurice Tobin of No. 4 company, 57th Regiment, who has enlisted for overseas service was presented with a handsome wrist watch by Mr. and Mrs. F. T. C. Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 18, 1915

FIRST OF ITS KIND.

Though the sinking of a British troop ship off the Dardanelles is in the abstract a terrible calamity in respect to the loss of lift, it has one or two features that tend to mitigate the severity of the loss. It is to the surprise of all who have thought of the possibilities, the first case of its kind in the course of one year of war; and considering the great movements of troops in that time over the seas, it is a splendid tribute to the efficiency of the watch and ward kept by the British navy. Considering the multitude of British ships the loss is in that respect comparatively slight, and considering the death losses, in a mere numerical sense, with the idea of humane considerations eliminated, the loss is again slight. Apart from human suffering, the gravest aspect of the affair is the proof of the still existing danger the mishap affords; after one year of war, and even this has a compensating element, if we apply the new reminder of our danger, to renewed exertion in meeting it. Even if the Empire and our country and its liberties were not in peril, there is a call to put more strength into the fight in order to end the terrible catalogue of casualties and calamities that is being added to daily; to relieve the terrific drain upon the resources that would, if the war were over, be applied to the promotion of the pursuits of peace and the betterment of the world.

AGAINST HUMANITY.

We have long since ceased to expect honesty, or consistency, or decency, from the German war party. Germany has lost control of the seas to the British navy, and demands that United States shipments of munitions of war shall not be made since Germany can't get them, can't transport them across the ocean. While she objects to this Germany has been convicted of furnishing capital to build projectiles at Bridgeport, Conn. With characteristic consistency an agent of the German spy propaganda in the United States complains that the evidence of German breach of neutrality was stolen, something which, of course, German diplomacy would scorn to do. Proof is now forthcoming that Germany, while spending large sums of money in the United States to foster a sentiment against exportation of war munitions to the Allies, was secretly arranging to manufacture war munitions on a large scale and tie up other supplies from the Allies. Germany may not have been able to get these munitions to her battle fronts, but there is evidence that it was proposed to accumulate immense stores of munitions, to be turned in case of war against the forces of the very country where they are made. This is further evidence that Germany is the enemy of the world; that she is combatting every interest of civilization and humanity, with astonishing energy and efficiency. All humanity should be arrayed against her, and we in Canada are among the most concerned; for if Germany, through our indifference and lack of action, gains the upper hand, Canada will be among the first to feel the weight of the mailed fist, the symbol of the devilish doctrine of force which Germany and her confederates are trying to impose upon the world. In this case there is a call to every Canadian who is fit to enlist.

MANHOOD AND MARRIAGE.

That "many a true word is spoken in jest," is illustrated, or rather suggested by the remark of a young lady employed in a shop on Charlotte street, last night. Some of her customer friends were discussing household matters with her, and jocularly suggested that certain things would be useful to her when she got married. She replied in the same mood that there were small prospects of matrimony "with so many young men gone to the war" — and she shrewdly added, "the best ones too."

Here she, unconsciously perhaps, spoke a great truth at the present time. She was right in assuming that the flower of our young manhood, men with courage, sense of duty, patriotism, unselfishness, and the qualities that make real men, useful members of society and—good husbands, were in the fighting line. She was also right in assuming that young men who, being eligible and fit physically, refuse to enlist would not make good husbands. A man that, when the call comes; when there is urgency, refuses to fight for his country, cannot be expected to fight for his wife and family—in the workshop, in the factory, or in other callings, where manhood is demanded. He cannot be expected to be effectively alive to the call of the humdrum, yet vitally important, duties, of ordinary life, if he neglects the one great duty of the hour.

We are told, that a young man, who is good to his mother, has in him the making of a good husband; a young man who is not good to his other mother, his country, in her time of stress and need, has not the qualities that go to the making of a good citizen, or a good husband, and head of a family.

There are many phases of this question of enlistment; and the man who being fit in other respects, shirks the plain call of duty to enlist, has to encounter many criticisms of his attitude. He may not think it, but even the young girls, whose fancy may sometimes be easily caught by superficial qualities, are doing a little thinking, and are forming opinions respecting young men who refuse to enlist, that are not at all complimentary and comfortable to any self-respecting young man.

It should be remembered that the call to the ranks comes from the fact that all we have, all we are, are in peril through this terrible war. Our Empire, our country, our national existence, all our liberties, our personal liberty, and assurance of comfortable living, our homes, our families and their happiness are at stake. The danger threatens all, and to all who can help avert the calamity the call comes.

The call is to men, to show themselves men, in every sense; to men who will not accept the humiliating position of having their interests protected by their fellow men, their personal friends and chums, who are in the fighting ranks, while they selfishly accept their sacrifices and do nothing.

Young men physically fit, are not in the class of men who, not being able to fight in the ranks, are helping with their means in the work of supporting those in the field. They are doing nothing, while even the women are at work. Last night in the course of duty of helping the war two homes were visited. In one where the busy housewife is burdened with family cares, she was found working feverishly to finish some work she was doing for the Red Cross; working as she had been during the evening, sacrificing the leisure and pleasure of the summer night; working from eve till twilight, from twilight to ten o'clock. Her work finished, it was taken to another home where a group of devoted women had been working making and baling hospital dressings, etc., to be sent to the hospitals abroad, for the relief of our men, the men who are fighting and suffering for us.

While all this is going on every day and night about us; while the recruiting bugle blows its clarion call, there are robust young men, sauntering the streets, looking with indifference and often expressed scorn, upon the gallant lads, who see their duty and do it. Which of the two classes can hold up their heads and qualify as men—as men who are respected by themselves and by their fellow-men—as men who are good citizens and loyal subjects—factors and not misfits in the scheme of society, the community, the nation, and the Empire?

The young men of Peterborough are in one class or another; and where they shall stand, rests with themselves.

Our King and country calls men; the bread line calls the other kind.

UP WITH THE KAISER, DOWN WITH UNCLE SAM.

THE ATTITUDE OF BUSINESS INTERESTS IN THE MATTER OF AN EARLY GENERAL ELECTION

[illegible] were adopted as naturally as though the operators were in Berlin.

So it went. It is a revelation which should run this government to action. The Germans appear to have assumed that President Wilson would tolerate anything. The exposure should go on and there should be a house cleaning in the Diplomatic Corps. For this matter goes at the very heart of national decency and national self-respect.

This government must be conducted by Americans and not by Germans.—New York Herald.

A WRONG GUESS.

A short time ago when Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of Canadian Pacific was in England, he was asked about the prospects of maintaining the 10 per cent. dividend. According to the press cable Sir Thomas declined to discuss the question beyond the statement that Canadian Pacific was a very strong institution. While this despatch was being examined from all angles in a brokerage office, turned upside down and tested for invisible ink and so forth, a member of the Stock Exchange who had made a big reputation as a trader and manipulator entered and asked the nature of the discussion. On being shown the newspaper clipping he glanced through it and commented "Well, if that's what Shaughnessy said it's safe betting the dividend will be cut." The declaration of the regular rate at Wednesday's meeting of the Canadian Pacific directors shows that there is one railroad management that the Wall Street plunger doesn't understand.—Wall Street Journal.

UNTIMELY, DISLOYAL CRITICISM

A "white elephant of the Laurier regime," a Liberal scandal," and similar terms are used by the Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto News in a despatch telling of the decision of the public works department to remove the cracked tower of the Victoria Museum. If the museum is in bad shape as is said it is undoubtedly a white elephant, and certainly it was constructed during the administration of the Laurier government. And it is obviously the purpose of the News to connect the two facts in such a way as to reflect upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Who is to be injured and who helped by the casting of such a reflection? There is no political issue in the country now, but on the contrary the leaders of both political parties are striving to have the nation do its utmost for the success of the war. Good people, from these efforts, would be matter will scatter them. The Free News and other Conservatives would be amazed if the executive of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier party organization [illegible]

[illegible] nda into wholehearted participation in the war as they are for the success of Sir Robert Borden's work. And yet, when the Liberal leaders are directing appeals that should have good results because of the public confidence in them, an entirely irrelevant attempt is made to discredit them.

Were there any party gain to be made from reflecting now upon what the Liberal government was responsible for years ago, there might be excuse for it, but instead of even making political ammunition, this reflection, had it any effect at all, would tend toward minimizing the work of the Liberal leaders are doing now. work that the country needs.—Ottawa Free Press.

NEXT FOR PREMIERSHIP

HON. J. C. SMUTS NOW BOTHA'S RIGHT HAND MAN.

Present Minister of Finance and Defence in the South African Union Government Was Kruger's Attorney-General—He Has Had a Career Full of Signal Triumphs—Protege of Cecil Rhodes.

"Whatever may be the future of South Africa, it will probably be more affected by him than by any other man." Ten years ago those words were written by one of South Africa's leading publicists concerning General Jan Christian Smuts, the iron-willed Minister of Finance and Defence in the Union Government, and every day that passes makes it more evident that their writer was endowed with considerably more than ordinary prescience.

It is an open secret that the Government policy, never more clear-headed than during the last year of crisis, is the policy of the brilliant farmer's son and Cambridge graduate whom, at only 28, astute old Paul Kruger made his Attorney-General, a policy, however, that is tempered by the more conciliatory Botha, than whom none appreciates more highly the exceptional gifts of his legislative right hand and close personal friend.

Not long ago the whole world rang with the phrases of the stinging letter in which Smuts, who fought brilliantly against the British in the Boer war, and once was supposed to represent the irreconcilable Dutch element, heaped obloquy on the head of Beyers, who, commander-in-chief of the Union Defence Force, resigned his command rather than take the offence against the Germans in south-west Africa, and later aided and abetted De Wet in fomenting rebellion against the Government to whom both had sworn allegiance, and who has just paid the penalty of his treachery with his life.

This warrior-parliamentarian, who is only 44 to-day, is tall, well set-up and uncommonly handsome. He has fair hair, a high forehead, and steel-blue eyes that mark the enthusiast, and he wears a well-tended moustache and a short beard of the Vandyke order. Though his will is of iron, he is diplomatic and adroit in argument.

His father, a typical Boer and a member of the State Assembly, was a farmer in the Malmsbury district of Cape Colony, and the boy got his first education at the South African College, at Stellanbosch, the home of the Young Afrikander party.

Industrious as well as clever, young Smuts took one scholarship [illegible] and by so doing attracted the attention of the man of the hour, Cecil Rhodes. Eventually Smuts won the Porter scholarship, which would have brought him to England, but almost immediately after he did so the bank in which its funds were invested failed. Then Rhodes stepped in. The empire-builder declared that a lad of such remarkable promise ought not to suffer on this account, and promptly offered to pay Smuts' expenses during a three years' course of study at St. John's College, Cambridge, and young Smuts accepted the offer and went to England forthwith. At Cambridge his career was a brilliant one the young student capturing the gold medal and heading the list of both parts of the Law Tripos of 1894.

These honors won, Smuts returned to South Africa, where he soon was made a member of the Cape bar, and, incidentally, married. Mrs. Smuts, by the bye, was and is still as brilliant a classical scholar as her husband, and is said to be generally seen "with a baby under one arm and a Greek dictionary under the other." Meanwhile her husband prospered in the law and still enjoyed the patronage of Cecil Rhodes, who intended him to contest the safe seat of Kimberley, but then came the Jameson raid, which ended the friendship between the colossus and his young protege. Smuts, indeed, became his benefactor's most determined foe, and stumped the country against him, then giving evidence for the first time of unusual power as an orator. Shortly afterward he went to Pretoria to practice as a barrister, where he soon gathered a practice, and, in 1897, was made State Attorney by President Kruger in succession to the renowned Doctor Coster. At this time, it is said, he did his best to persuade Oom Paul to grant reforms.

War came, however, and Smuts went to the front as a simple burgher, but, like most of the Boer leaders, displayed such instinctive military ability that he rose rapidly in rank and was a general before the struggle closed. The brilliant British commander, General Ian Hamilton, refers to him in his "Staff Officer's Scrap-book" as "that extraordinarily clever young man, General Smuts," and, indeed, Smuts made both his bravery and his strategy respected. A successful raid into the western district of Cape Colony made him famous, but perhaps his most brilliant action was fought in November, 1901, when surrounded by the British columns at Elands' River Poort, he rushed a squadron of the 17th Lancers and fought his way through them. Later, with Botha, he was largely instrumental in preventing the destruction of the mines, and by the end of the campaign he had attained to the supreme command in Cape Colony.

The war over, Smuts, accepting the inevitable, became a sincere loyalist. He was the brains of the "Het Volk," just as he is now the brains of the Union Government, and for the next several years was counsellor-in-chief to the Boer leaders. The appointment of Lord Selborne saw him re-enter the political arena, and at the welcoming banquet he was the principal speaker. In 1907 Smuts was chosen to come to England to present the Cullinan diamond to King Edward, and at this time and thenceforth he is said to have made sensational representations to the British Government as to the desirability of granting a [illegible]

Music Hath Charms.

Rudyard Kipling made an interesting speech at the Mansion House in London the other day, in behalf of the fund for providing bands for the new army. Here are a few characteristic passages:

"The new battalions were born quite rightly in silence, but that is no reason why they should continue to walk in silence the rest of their lives. Unfortunately, up to the present most of them have been obliged to walk in silence or to no better accompaniment than whistles, concertinas and other meritorious but inadequate instruments with which they provide themselves.

"From the lowest point of view a few drums and fifes in a battalion mean at least five extra miles in a route march.

"The roll and flourish of drums and fifes around barracks is as warming and cheering as the sight of fire in a room.

"I remember in India, in a cholera camp, when the men were suffering very badly. The band of the Lincolns started the regimental song. It went on with that queer, defiant tune. It was their regimental march that the men had heard a thousand times, but as it was given at that bad time in a terrible camp of death, it was the one thing that could have restored the shaken men back to their pride and self-control."

Its Drawbacks.

They tell in London of an auctioneer who in addition to a fine personal appearance and splendid elocutionary talents possessed considerable culture and knowledge of human nature.

At a book sale this gentleman would read with exquisite taste passages from the books he was selling, with brief biographies and criticisms of their authors, reciting hexameters from Greek and Roman classics and rendering passages from humorous writers with a tone and air so ludicrous as to set the room in a roar of laughter. Thus he often won higher prices for books than those got at the shops.

A amusing example of his cleverness in extolling an estate is the language with which he once closed a highly-colored description of the property he was selling. For a few moments he paused and then said:

"And now, gentlemen, having given a truthful description of this magnificent estate candor compels me to point out that it has two drawbacks, the litter of the rose leaves and the noise of the nightingales."

Good Word For All.

The Archbishop of York, in his early days, did a great deal of work among the uneducated classes, and on one occasion a very illiterate woman was god-mother to a child at a christening. In the course of the ceremony she was asked, in the usual way, if she renounced the devil and all his works, etc.

"Oh, yes, sir," she replied, briskly, "I recommend them all."

HE WON HIS BET

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

I was a reader for a prominent magazine. Perhaps I should explain to those who are not familiar with editorial work that a reader is one who reads manuscripts of unknown authors. A manuscript is brought in to the editor, who sits at a mahogany desk and listens with apparent intentness to a long account of the merits of the work submitted, smiles benignly on the author and as soon as he is gone tosses the manuscript to the reader without a word.

The magazine I was with being for women, most of the readers were women, I being one of the women.

At one time when the editor was ill those who insisted on seeing the editor were referred to me. One of those who left a manuscript with me was a man who seemed to me to be of such caliber that either he should be a successful writer or should not be a writer at all. But successful writers were not used to asking us to publish their works, we asked them to do us the honor to permit us to publish them. I was certainly impressed with Mr. Horatio Beardsley—the name on the title page of his story—and promised him that I would give his story a careful reading.

I did most of my work at home and took Mr. Beardsley's story, called "A Fool For His Pains," there to read it. But a great many manuscripts were crowding upon us at the time, and we were especially successful in getting recognized literary lights in the literary world to give us their works for publication. The consequence was that I omitted to read "A Fool For His Pains" for some time.

One day I looked in my closet for the manuscript, where I had left it, and did not find it there. I asked my mother what had become of it and learned that she had burned an accumulation of pasteboard boxes recently. The manuscript was in a pasteboard box, and it was apparent to me that it had gone up in smoke.

I was terror stricken. If through my carelessness a manuscript committed to my care were destroyed and there was no other copy in existence I would not only suffer a terrible mortification but would lose my position, on which I was dependent for a living for both my mother and myself.

When I went again to the office of the magazine a letter from Horatio Beardsley was handed me, stating that he had made arrangements for the publication of "A Fool For His Pains" and asking them to return the manuscript. I said nothing at the office about its destruction, for I had not sufficiently recovered from the shock to make up my mind what to do or say in the matter. I went home and tried to think out a way by which I might save myself from the loss of my position, though there was no possible way of escaping the mortification to which I would be subjected.

What I decided upon was this: I wrote a note to Mr. Beardsley, confessing that his manuscript had been burned and asking him if he had another copy and begging him for the present to say nothing about the matter. My note brought him to see me at my home, and it was plain that he was much chagrined at the loss of his manuscript. I told him I could raise $50, which I knew was more than any author unknown to the public could get for a story of the same length as the one he had submitted. He looked up at me with a curious expression when I said this, but made no reply. He left me saying that he would think over what was best to do, but in the meanwhile I need give him self no uneasiness concerning it. This was very good of him, and I felt very grateful.

A few days after I received a letter from him saying that he had decided to rewrite the lost story. Work he did over a second time was always better than his first effort. If I could spare the time to become his manuscripts for the work he would not only excuse me for the destruction of the original manuscript, but if he received a higher price for the second draft than he had been offered for the first he would divide the excess with me.

I was only too glad to escape with this penalty and accepted the proposition except as to any pecuniary interest in what he received for his story. I gave him a couple of hours every working day for a month, at the end of which time the story was finished. In the course of another week I received a note from the author containing a check for $250, which he said was my share of the excess over what he had been offered for the first draft of his story. And what was my consternation to see in his signature the name of one of the most gifted writers before the public!

He had made a bet with a friend that he would submit a story to a [illegible] magazine under an assumed name and nothing would come of it. Something more than he expected did come of it. His story was burned. Time showed why he treated me so nicely. It seems that he had taken the same liberty with me that I had taken to him. That is why he wished me for his associates. He desired to be with me to become acquainted with me, and when I found out he was afforded an opportunity to make love to me. I have been his wife several years and have not yet heard the last of the burning of his production. Indeed, I never expect to hear the last of it. What troubled me at the time was that I could not tell a gifted writer from a common scribbler.

—News of Hastings

Special to The Examiner:

HASTINGS, AUG. 17.—Rev. G. Andrews of Pontypool, occupied the pulpit in the Methodist Church on Sunday last, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. I. Snell, who, with Mrs. Snell, is off for their annual vacation.

The W. M. S. and Mission Band held their August meeting on Thursday last, which took the form of an outing down on the river bank. The children were allowed to amuse themselves in various ways until time for supper arrived, when they were seated on the grass and treated to all manner of good things. Needless to say that this part of the programme was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and the friends of the Mission Band had provided abundantly for their wants along this line. Altogether the afternoon proved to be a very enjoyable one, the success of which was due to the Superintendent and her assistants.

No "Star" has been issued for the past two weeks, as the staff is on their annual holiday.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnston, painter and decorator, 510 College Street, will be answered on Wednesdays questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign-writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

Bungalow Q. I have had the roof and sides of my Stoney Lake cottage newly shingled. What do you recommend, paint or shingle stain?

A. I know of nothing better than the "Creosote stains." They are made in a variety of pleasing shades and make a cottage or bungalow extremely picturesque and beautiful. Besides creosol or "creosote" is a well-known preservative of all vegetable tissues, as it in uniting with the sappy part of the wood, which is naturally the first to decay, forms a climate and water resisting compound. It is also said to ward off the ravages of [illegible].

Smith, Ep. Q. My paper will not stick to the wall. I used flour paste and put glue in it. What is the best thing to do?

P. S. The plaster is just the raw kind.

A. I take that you mean by raw plaster, what is known as sand finish. First, go over ceiling and walls thoroughly with a block of wood to remove the loose sand. Then apply a coat of thin paste to which has been added a cup of brown sugar to a pail. Let this dry. Then hang in the usual way, and it will stick. If you use good, stiff paste on your paper. If it is very tough hang lining paper first.

A Reader, Peterborough. Q. Kindly give me a suggestion for decorating my den. I don't like wall paper, so what can I do? The room is 8 x 12 feet, the woodwork is painted a sort of dirty white, the paper is all white. I don't mind spending a fair amount providing it is neat and no flashy colors. Also, whom would you recommend to do the work?

A. It is rather difficult to suggest a plan of decoration when one is not familiar with the details, those little important details of a room that must be used to give a finish, that indescribable something or other, after the artistic touch, as it were. However, here is a neat and simple outline of one style.

Paint your ceiling an old ivory, wood to dead flat, walls tinted three in favor of buff about 1 1/2 to 2 inches wide. Your decorator will lay them out to the best advantage with either fillet or ornament corners, or if oval, at ends and sides. Have a nice wide plate rail, by all means. But do not make the all too common mistake of having it too high. It should be where you can comfortably reach it when you want to show your friend that rare curiosity or object of art so dear to your heart or memory. That is quite a feature in decoration nowadays. The wall above the rail will be blended or stippled flat to the color of your ceiling or ceiling lines at the top, to eliminate at the corners the [illegible] very pleasing. The woodwork should be fumed oak, with a dull wax finish, polished oak floor, couple of tobacco and antique brown rugs, cream lace sash curtains, with patterned seal brown chintz or tapestry valance curtains. Of course your furniture would need to be in harmony when you would have the unique distinction of an absolutely self-tone den. I cannot, in this column, recommend any firm to do your work.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was for merly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

News From the Barriefield Camp

BARRIEFIELD Aug. 18. A recommendation was made a couple of years ago that permanent shacks be built at Barriefield, and the plans then submitted will be the ones that will now be considered. While the outlay of nearly $100,000 may be considered a big one, yet it will pay the Militia Department to expend this sum of money on its own buildings rather than spend a large sum of money to prepare buildings in the city for the accommodation of so many troops, and at last have nothing to show for it. Last winter it cost the department about $20,000 to accommodate the 21st battalion at artillery park and the Cereal Works, and after the battalion left, all the material used was of no further use. The 59th battalion and the 3 batteries of artillery, together with the 8th C.M.R., will have to be supplied with winter quarters while recruiting and training drafts for overseas, and the building of shacks is the proper solution to the problem.

Since the 8th C.M.R. went to Belleville on Friday, the people of the western town feel that they would like to have just such an excellent cavalry regiment in their town all winter and it is said that Belleville will make every effort to secure the 8th. But this will hardly prove successful, as they are already quartered here and will probably stay where they may be trained in conjunction with infantry and artillery. The Standard has suggested that something in the way of entertainments be provided for such regiments in the city at least twice a month. The Opera Hall has an excellent floor for dancing and the rest at a reasonably price would mean little to the city of Kingston, and more to officers and men who come to the city.

It is said that the new battalion to follow the mobilization of the 77th at Ottawa will be the 46th at Barriefield camp. Just as soon as the 77th battalion is up to strength, the 46th will be organized and brought into camp here. The location occupied by the 59th Battalion is being kept for the organization, and no other camp will be allowed to take its place.

Vancouver News-Advertiser, (Conservative)

"Mr. Rowell's hearers were plainly moved by the impassioned appeal of the Ontario Leader. His words came with all the sincerity and conviction that only belief in a great cause can give. Mr. Rowell seemed so on fire with his subject that he could scarcely wait for the applause to subside before he plunged on again."

Victoria Colonist, (Conservative)

"Mr. Rowell is doing splendid service in his efforts to awaken Canadians to an appreciation of what German success would mean to them and to the world. His appeal to Canadians to do their full duty was calculated to stir the most slucgish blood."

"Victoria is visited today by a distinguished son of Canada in the person of Newton W. Rowell, leader of the Liberal party in Ontario. Mr. Rowell does not come in the guise of a political chieftain, but as a Canadian who for years has been associated with prominent movements planned to promote the best citizenship, and the betterment of humanity."

Vancouver Province, (Conservative)

"As a recruiting agent, Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., leader of the Ontario Opposition, showed the Canadian Club at luncheon in the Hotel Vancouver today that he had nothing to learn. Mr. Rowell's speech was freely conceded to be the most stirring and patriotic address given to the Canadian Club."

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

The Treatment of Women and Children.

In considering the question of provocation it is pertipent to take into account the numerous cases in which old women and very small children have been shot, bayoneted, and even mutilated. Whatever excuse may be offered by the Germans for the killing of grown-up women, there can be no possible defence for the murder of children, and if it can be shown that infants and small children were not infrequently bayoneted and shot, it is a fair inference that many of the offences against women require no explanation more recondite than the unbridled violence of brutal or drunk en criminals.

It is clearly shown that many offences were committed against infants and quite young children. On one occasion children were even roped together and used as a military screen against the enemy; on another, three soldiers went into action carrying small children to protect themselves from flank fire. A shocking case of the murder of a baby by a drunken soldier at Malines is thus recorded by one eye-witness and confirmed by another.

"One day, when the Germans were not actually bombarding the town, I left my house to go to my mother's house in High street. My husband was with me. I saw eight German soldiers, and they were drunk. They were singing and making a lot of noise and dancing about. As the German soldiers came along the street I saw a small child, whether boy or girl I could not see, come out of a house. The child was about two years of age. The child came into the middle of the street so as to be in the way of the soldiers. The soldiers were walking in twos. The first line of two passed the child, one of the second line, the man on the left stepped aside and drove his bayonet with both hands into the child's stomach, lifting the child into the air on his bayonet and carrying it away on his bayonet, he and his comrades still singing. The child screamed when the soldier struck it with his bayonet, but not afterwards."

These, no doubt, were for the most part the acts of drunken soldiers, but an incident has been recorded which discloses the fact that even sober and highly-placed officers were not always disposed to place a high value on child life. Thus the General who had to be conducted to the Town Hall at Lebbeke, remarked in French to his guide, who was accompanied by a small boy, "If you do not show me the right way I will shoot you and your boy." There was no need to carry this threat into execution, but that the threat should have been made is significant.

We cannot tell whether these acts of cruelty to children were part of the scheme for inducing submission by inspiring terror. In Louvain, where the system of terrorizing was carried to the furthest limit, outrages on women were uncommon. The same, however, cannot be said of some of the smaller villages which were subjected to the system. In Hofstade and Sempst, in Haecht, Rotselaer, and Westphalen, many children were murdered. No can it be said of the village of Lummen, where three small children (whose names are given by an eye-witness of the crime) were slaughtered on the green for no apparent motive. It is difficult to imagine the motives which may have prompted such acts. Whether or no Belgian civilians acted on German soldiers, young children, at any rate, did not fire. The number and character of these murders constitute the most distressing feature connected with the conduct of the war so far as it is revealed in the depositions submitted to the committee.

(c) The Use of Civilians as Screens.

We have before us a considerable body of evidence with reference to the practice of the Germans of using civilians and sometimes military prisoners as screens from behind which they could fire upon the Belgian troops in the hope that the Belgians would not return the fire for fear of killing or wounding their own countrymen.

In some cases this evidence relates to places where fighting was actually going on in the streets of a town or villages, and to these cases we attach little importance. It might well happen when terrified civilians were rushing about to seek safety, that groups of them might be used as screens by either side of the combatants without any intention of inhumanity or of any breach of the rules of the civilized warfare. But setting aside these doubtful cases there remains evidence which satisfies us that on so many occasions as to justify its being described as a practice the German soldiers, under the eyes and by the direction of their officers were guilty of this act. Thus for instance on the road from Eleron near Liege no male children were marched in front of the Germans to prevent the Belgian soldiers from firing.

The progress of the Germans through Mons was marked by many incidents of this character. Thus, on the 22nd August, half a dozen Belgian colliers returning from work were marching in front of some German troops who were pursuing the English, and in the opinion of the witness they must have been placed there intentionally. An English officer describes how he caused a barricade to be erected in a main thoroughfare leading out of Mons, when the Germans, in order to reach a crossroad in the rear, fetched civilians out of the houses on each side of the main road and compelled them to hold up white flags and act as cover.

Another British officer who saw this incident, is convinced that the Germans were acting deliberately for the purpose of protecting themselves from the fire of the British troops. Apart from this protection, the Germans could not of advanced, as the street was straight and commanded by the British rifle fire at a range of 700 or 800 yards. Several British soldiers also speak to this incident, and their story is confirmed by a Flemish witness in a side street.

On the 24th of August men, women and children were actually pushed into the front of the German position outside Mons. The witness speaks of 16 to 20 women, about a dozen children, and half a dozen men being there. Seven or eight women and five or six young children were utilized in this way by some Uhlans between Landrecies and Guise.

A Belgian soldier saw an incident of this character during the retreat from Namur.

At the battle of Malines, 60 or 80 Belgian civilians, amongst whom were some women, were driven before the German troops. Another witness saw a similar incident near Malines but a much larger number of civilians was involved, and a priest was in front with a white flag. In another instance, related by a Belgian soldier, the civilians were tied by the wrists in groups.

At Eppeghem, where the Germans were driven back by the Belgian sortie from Antwerp, civilians were used as a screen for the German retreat.

Near Malines, early in September, about 70 children roped together were driven in front of a German force.

At Louvain, 20 or 40 civilians, men, women and children were placed at the head of a German column. One witness from Termonde was made to stand in front of the Germans, together with others, all with their hands above their heads. Those who allowed their hands to drop were at once prodded with the bayonet. Again at Termonde, about September the 10th, a number of civilians were shot by the Belgian soldiers who were compelled to fire at the Germans, taking [illegible]

At Tournai, 400 Belgian civilians, men, women and children, were placed in front of the Germans who then engaged the French.

The operations outside Antwerp were not free from incidents of this character. Near Willebroeck some civilians, including a number of children, a woman and one old man, were driven in front of the German troops. German officers were present, and one woman who refused to advance, was stabbed twice with the bayonet, and a little child who ran up to her as she fell had built its head blown away by a rifle shot. Other incidents of the same kind are reported from Nazareth and Ypres. The British troops were compelled to fire, in some cases at the risk of killing civilians.

At Ypres the Germans drove women in front of them by pricking them with bayonets. The wounds were afterwards seen by the witness.

Part (d) Looting, burning and destruction of property, and offences against combatants, will be published in Evening Examiner, August 19th.

To Keep Skin White, Velvety, Wrinkle-Free

J C M says "I perspire so excessively that powder makes my face streaky these days and creams make it greasy and shiny. What can I use?" Try the plan recommended to Helen.

M H writes. My skin seems so loose and wrinkly in hot weather. What will help it? Use a wash lotion made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. This is immediately effective in any wrinkled or flabby condition. Use once a day for awhile and results will surprise you.

Helen A. simple way to keep your skin smooth, soft and white is to apply ordinary moist cold cream before retiring, washing it off in the morning. This keeps the face free from the particles of dirt, etc., which constantly appear. The pores become worn-out particles, a the younger, fresher, healthier skin is all ways in view. An ounce of mercolized wax may be had at small cost at any drug store. Use like cold cream. Aunt Sally in Woman's Realm.

LOOKS AS IF CITY HAD BEEN SWEPT BY CONFLAGRATION

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Eyewitnesses of the carnage in Mexico by which innocent children, American men and women are slaughtered and incendiarism and theft committed, were brought to this city recently by passengers of the Ward Line steamship Mexico which arrived from Vera Cruz.

The composite declaration of the 200 passengers is that Mexico City looks as though it had been swept by a conflagration.

Not only is Mexico City reeking with victims, but nearby cities are equal sufferers. The lives of Americans, they say, are thought no more of than of sheep.

Of the 200 passengers, 175 were Mexicans who once commanded wealth but who with their wives and children are penniless refugees.

Dr. Anceto Foro, an American citizen, who had one of the best practises in the Mexican capital, wept as he surveyed his little family and the handbag full of belongings he was able to bring back to the United States with him.

"There are five of us here now—my wife and our three children," he said. "But our five-year-old boy Frank lies dead in Mexico City, a victim of the blood thirst of the soldiers. The little fellow was playing in the street not long since when a band of soldiers came along and shot him.

"Our home was burned to the ground and all we escaped with was our lives. The $30,000 I had on deposit in various banks there and other investments I had made are all gone. The gold was stolen and the property burned. Now we will return to the house here I purchased before going to Mexico City. It is at No. 545 Fifty-second street, Brooklyn."

James Sherbrook, a transportation agent for the Scottish-Mexican Oil Company, said:

"I stopped off at Tuxpan with a friend on our way to Vera Cruz," said Seabrook. "While going through one of the principal streets we saw a squad of soldiers enter a house. At the points of bayonets they shoved an American engineer and his wife into the middle of the street and shot them. They then looted the house. We tried to get the names of the victims, but it was worth our lives to remain long in the locality."

Ammonia Drives 16 Families Out

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Sixteen families were driven from their homes and ten persons overcome by ammonia fumes following an explosion yesterday in the refrigerating plant of the Jacob Ruppert Brewery, Nos. 205 to 209 East Ninety-second street.

Firemen and the police reserves were helpless until the arrival of the Great Jones street rescue company, which made the run of more than four miles in six minutes. Three persons were killed by a similar explosion in the same plant three years ago.

John Schuler, J. E. Kennedy, Fred Peterson and Valentine Spindler, workmen, were overcome while trying to shut off the escaping fumes, which spread rapidly and drove the tenants of two houses adjoining the brewery into the street. When Deputy Fire Chief Haves arrived the building was marooned by the suffocating gas.

Ernest Plate and Charles Gunther, also employees, tried to reach the ammonia tanks with smoke helmets, but were overcome and rescued with great difficulty. Four spectators who ventured too close also collapsed, and had to be carried several blocks away before they could be revived.

With the equipment for the rescue company it was possible to reach the inside of the place and the fumes were shut off.

Little Gentleman Saves Girl's Life Won't Tell Name

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Somewhere in Brooklyn there is a lad, about ten years old, who recently saved a little girl from bleeding to death by carrying her on his back for a weary mile to a hospital, because his father has always told him to be a gentleman, and help the weak. What his name is hasn't been learned, because he refused to tell the surgeon at the Long Island College Hospital, even when threatened with a policeman.

Madeline Beatturks, eight years old, and her sister, Sadie, who is five years old, were playing in the public playgrounds at Baltic and Hicks street yesterday when Madeline was forced to remove her worn shoes because a nail was hurting her. With the right shoe in her hand she started to hop homeward to No. 49 Columbia street, up Hicks street when she stepped on a jagged piece of glass. The glass lay deeply and the little girl fainted prior to the cork, where she lay until the unknown little gentleman came along.

He laboriously lifted the girl to his back and trudged to the hospital, occasionally putting her down for the moment, while to rested. At the hospital an astonished dooterender took the burden from the youth and called Dr. Harry Burnfield. The latter found the girl weak from loss of blood and said that a few minutes more might have proved fatal to her.

The lad persistently refused to give his name.

"I'm being a gentleman, like my father says he pretends and I'm away

War-Scarred Soldiers Arrive on the "New York"

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—W. C. Nixon, of St. Louis, formerly a lieutenant in the American navy, and in command of the torpedo boat destroyer Flusser, returned yesterday on the steamer New York from a business trip to England.

"If any one ten years ago had said that such a landing as that made on Gallipoli was possible, the most radical naval expert would have branded the statement as foolish," he said. "I think the combined naval and land operations in that campaign the most brilliant landing fete ever accomplished."

Ex-Private John Costello, of the Gordon Highlanders, came over as a steward of the New York. He proudly showed the scars of twenty-nine bayonet and sword wounds in his left arm and shoulder.

"I got mine somewhere in France" he said, in a rich brogue that belied his regimental badge. "They patched me up at the field ambulance and I went back in the trenches, and I got 'em one after another then. At last I got so many that the doctors ordered me back home.

"When I got this one," he said, pointing to a bayonet wound in the shoulder, "I saw 150 men in my regiment knocked out in five minutes. We were hit pretty bad, but the Germans got theirs, too."

Lieutenant P. A. Curry, one of the English manager of the American Line, was another passenger. His arm was in a sling from wounds received in Flanders.

The Honourable Mrs. Frederick E. Guest, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Phipps, of Roslyn, L.I., was another passenger. Her husband is attached to the staff of General French.

Mrs. J. Schaffhausen, the English wife of the Chancellor of the Imperial German Embassy at Washington, arrived with her three children.

Another passenger was Captain J. Donald Tod, sailing master of George J. Gould's yacht Atlanta. He has been doing special work for the British Admiralty.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Swanson, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

GERMANS HAVE LOST 120,000 IN RECENT BATTLES IN POLAND

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD Aug. 18 — A Russian expert writing on the present lull in the German operations regarding Mackensen's army, which is known to be the chief factor in the plan for the envelopment of the Russian army, points out that the German lists of losses, showing 146,761 casualties, do not include 26 Bavarian, 174 Saxon and 258 Wuerttemburg lists, nor 47 lists of losses of the German fleet. These make a total of 3,500,000, to which must be added 120,000 losses sustained by the Prussians during the last battles. These figures, he states, so stunned the German staff that, besides recognizing the frustration of its plan of envelopment, it was compelled to withdraw six corps from the fighting line. These were then used to form new reserves. About two corps only, amounting in strength to two regiments, have been sent against Serbia to assist Austria against Italy.

It is considered here that the absence of fights along the left bank of the Bug is due to the Russian army having successfully established connection with the garrison of Brest-Litovsky.

Frederick Rennet telegraphs the Daily News: "The Russian general who left Novo-Georgievsk, which is now completely invested, declares the fortress is abundantly supplied with victuals and munitions sufficient to last a year. The fortress has been prepared to withstand a siege. The garrison is at its necessary strength and there were no unnecessary mouths to feed, all civilians having been expelled in time. The batteries and forts are similar to those of Osowiec, which have been holding out against the strongest German artillery for many months. The sanitary conditions of Novo-Georgievsky are excellent.

Belgians Retake Famous Position

Examiner Special:

FURNES Belgium Aug. 18 — The famous bridgehead at Dixmude, three lost and three retaken by the Belgians, remained in their hands this morning after a desperate assault by the Germans had been repulsed.

The bridgehead is a fragment of the right bank of the Yser beyond the Dixmude bridge. The Germans hold all the adjoining ground, but the Belgians have clung to the positions approached by the bridge since October, weeding off incessant German attacks and enduring a daily shelling. The Germans, attracted by the exposed Belgian position, frequently have attacked in mass formation, and it is estimated they lost 3,000 men there from October to August 1.

After three attempts the Germans had abandoned direct efforts to occupy the trenches, but kept up a fire from three sides. Every evening at the hour of relief German field guns and Gatlings played on the position, and the communicating trenches; every evening a few Belgians fell in coming or going and remained on the ground until a convenient opportunity came to remove them. The position was useless in the absence of a general attack, but it had cost the Belgians much to hold on. Many guns were posted on the left bank with several batteries of three-inchers behind them.

At the hour of relief last evening no relief was sent, but the occupying detachment evacuated the trenches under the protection of artillery and machine guns. Then the gunners wanted for the attack which came in the early morning. The Germans were permitted to advance four deep without molestation until they came within range of the machine guns, which then opened fire, supported by the three-inchers. Most of the attacking force fell before they reached the trench of the bridgehead, and the Belgian guns had the range so well that those who got into the trenches were obliged to abandon them.

TURKISH SCHEME ATTEMPTS TO EXTERMINATE ARMENIAN RACE

LONDON, Aug. 18 — The Daily News has received from Ameurin Williams M.P., a copy of a letter from Constantinople, dated July 13, further describing the terrible plight of Armenians in Turkey. The latter says:

"We now know with certainty from a reliable source that Armenians have been deported in a body from all towns and villages to the desert regions south of Aleppo. Refugees will have to traverse on foot a distance requiring marches of from one to two or even more months. We learn besides that the roads and Euphrates River are strewn with corpses of exiles, and those who survive are doomed to certain death, since they will find neither house, work nor food in the desert. It is a plan to exterminate the whole Armenian nation without cessation. Twelve Armenians were lanced at Caesarea on the charge of having obeyed instructions which they had received from a meeting secretly held at Bucharest by Trochak and Henchak societies. Many have fallen from blows from hub. Thirteen Armenians were killed in this way at Dairbekir and six at Caesarea. Thirteen others were killed on their way from Chabin Karahisa to Sivas. Priests of the village of Kurk, with their five companions, suffered the same fate on the road to Son Chekrissvas, although they had their hands bound.

"Hundreds of women, young girls and even children, groan in prison. Churches and convents have been pillaged, defiled and destroyed. Villages around Van and Bulis have been pillaged and the inhabitants put to the sword. At the beginning of this month all inhabitants of Harshik were pitilessly massacred.

GREAT AUGUST SALE

Caveat Emptor.

(Let the Buyer Beware.)

"Caveat Emptor" or "Let the Buyer Beware" was the motto of the old time merchant. His business was to get all he could and give as little as possible in return.

That was dishonest, of course, and experience has shown that it was not even profitable. The successful merchant or manufacturer to-day is the one who gives real value. The dealer to-day who wants to establish a permanent business knows that Honesty is the best policy and to prove that he is there to stay, he advertises.

You can depend on getting a square deal from the regular and persistent advertiser.

New York Stocks

Can yesterday's unusual activity in Detroit Railway shares be taken to indicate the company is going in for the manufacture of war munitions.

Lloyd B. Sanderson, general agent for several large transatlantic lines, predicts the largest cargoes of grain in the history of New York will be shipped from this port next month.

Announcement of a proposition for the reorganization of the M. Rumely Company is expected in a few days. According to current reports, the preferred stock is to be assessed about $17 a share and the common $9. Preferred stockholders will receive 50 per cent. in new common and common 25 per cent.

J. P. Morgan was back at his office yesterday for the first time since he was attacked in his home in Glen Cove on July 3 last. He was apparently in the best of health. He did not care to make any statement for publication.

W. H. Truesdale, president of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, is expected at his office the end of this week. As soon as he returns a meeting of the heads of the anthracite coal roads is likely to be called to consider an appeal against the order of the Inter-state Commerce Commission reducing rates.

The Atlantic Refining Company increased the wages of all its employees in its plants at Franklin, Pittsburg, and Philadelphia. The pay of labourers was increased from 19 1-2 cents to 21 cents an hour.

In St. Louis a project against the sale of the Wabash Railroad to the reorganization committee was filed in the federal District Court by the J. H. Truesdale Commission Co pany on the round that under the reorganization plan the claim of the commission company against the railroad company for freight overcharges will be forfeited.

Amalgamated copper started to exchange Amalgamated stock for Anaconda and also to distribute the cash bonus to holders of Amalgamated.

A petition for a receiver for the Missouri Pacific Iron Mountain Railway system has just been filed in the Federal District Court here. The suit was filed by the firm of Boyle and Priest, attorneys for the Commonwealth Steel Company, of St. Louis, which claims to be a creditor of the railroad to the extent of $55,000 for rolling stock and other railway supplies.

It is understood that Tooke Bros., Limited, have secured a moderate-sized war order from the Canadian Government. This is the first business of this nature received by the company since the very large order which Ottawa placed with shirt makers last November, and which kept the Tooke plant busy until February.

Bethlehem Steel Corporation interests have bought the Richmond (Ind.) plant of M. Rumely Company at a price above its appraised valuation, according to local bankers. It will be used for the manufacture of munitions of war.

New York Press Comment.

Journal of Commerce: The weakness in sterling is apt to encourage English selling pressure of American securities in this market.

World: Good buying is found in eastern and western trunk lines, and even the hard coalers show evidences of accumulation.

Sun: The decline in exchange is accepted as proof of the enormous strength of our economic position.

Times: A prominent banker whose the Street credits with giving more than merely passive approval to the recent rise in prices, says the dealing in war stocks is being overdone.

Wall Street Journal: Stocks are wanted on comparatively small recessions, and there are no indications of a culmination of the advance.

Financial America: It is understood that in the negotiations which are now pending for an enormous British credit, American securities constitute the only collateral to which careful consideration has been given.

Inca Relics.

Before taking leave of Cuzco, Peru we went to see the very interesting collection of Inca relics in the private museum of a Peruvian doctor who has devoted many years of his life to Inca research. Ranged round the walls were mummies which had been taken from rock tombs. All had been buried in a sitting posture, and judging by the horrible expression of agony on the parchment skin I should imagine that some of them—prisoners of war, I was told—had been entombed alive. The horror of those mummied faces and the awful contortions of the skeletons haunted me for a long time, nor shall I ever forget the sight.

One or two of the skulls bore evidence of skillful surgery, star shaped pieces of bone having been cleverly fitted in to repair damage done by the star shaped stone weapons of the period. I did not measure those I saw in the museum, but one of the aforesaid stone weapons which we brought back to England from Cuzco measured four inches from point to point across the top—a truly formidable club.—Wide World Magazine.

Fighting the Rat.

The greatest enemy of man is man and next to him perhaps the rat. He is incredibly cunning. He can live in any climate. He sails the sea in ships. He forages in the open fields or burrows through walls and intrudes into the home. Man himself is no hardier than the rat, and in the matching of wits against wits the rat has up to this time been the victor. He augments every famine in the world. If the depredations of rats could be prevented the cost of living certainly would be lowered. Active as he is in famine, the rat's most spectacular co-operation with death lies in his copartnership with pestilence. The study of method for the extermination of rats should be financed on some basis which will make it permanent. It is a fight which has not as yet been adequately waged notwithstanding the fine abilities of the doctors who are fighting the rat in combating bubonic plague. The business needs specialists.—Farm and Fireside.

War and Aeroplanes.

The art of war has been robbed by the aeroplane of the element of surprise which afforded Napoleon dramatic opportunity for the display of his genius. His object was to discover the weak spot in the enemy's lines and, having discovered it, to hurl upon it all the forces at his command. His success depended upon the speed and sureness with which the great blow could be struck. A premature revelation would have spoiled all. But a coup of the sort is no longer possible, for a maneuver on the one side is met instantly by a maneuver on the other. War now consists in a series of parallel movements; its art has changed. It would be scarcely an exaggeration to say that it does not exist. The two armies turn about each other like boxers in the preliminary phases of a fight. They pivot clumsily to catch each other at a disadvantage, and that is practically all the art of it.—London Times.

Voice of The People

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I noticed in your paper last night some remarks made by the so-called Evangelist, G. M. Sharpe, and which remarks are untrue, and this man knew it when he made them, but this Sharpe kind of so-called Evangelist have to say something and anything that will excite a certain class of people. This man made out that the Theatre was bad, and that marriage was treated as a joke, and that he had been on both sides of the Curtain, and he knew too much about it, and that there would not be so many Whippoorwill widows to-day if it were not for the dirty teachings of the stage.

In reply to those remarks I take exception and say that this self-styled Evangelist does not speak the truth, as there are just as good people on the stage to-day as there are in other walks of life, and a great number of wealthy and learned people who had to study for a great many years before they were able or allowed to appear upon a stage.

This self-styled Evangelist has the audacity to come to our city as a stranger and I don't suppose anyone knows who he is or where he comes from, only that he is a spouter and likes to see his face stuck in every paper. This man also has the check to have boards put up at several prominent corners of our city and bills stuck on posts, and which is contrary to the Laws and Regulations of our city, and which the residents and taxpayers of our own city are not allowed to do, but this man it seems has the nerve and comes here and tries to make the people believe he is a Saint. If the people want to hear the word of God preached, there are plenty of churches and first-class ministers in this city that will preach the truth to them without going to listen to a man that is travelling from place to place and trying to tell the people they are all wrong, and that he is right.

This man has evidently forgotten that passage of the Scripture, or perhaps he does not know about it, in which it says—"He that is without sin let him cast the first stone."

Thanking you Mr. Editor for your valuable space, I remain,
Yours respectfully,
CITIZEN.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir.—I saw an account in your paper that the 80th Regiment Band had sent their bandmaster to Toronto to buy new instruments. I think, Mr. Editor, this is wrong to send a man to Toronto to buy when we have first-class music stores, the J. M. Greene Co., and also Peterborough Music Co., who could have supplied the instruments as good and as cheap and perhaps a great deal cheaper than what was paid for them, and the money would have been left in our own city, and which should be, as no doubt the citizens have been or will be asked to subscribe the amount.

Thanking you for the use of your valuable space, I remain,
Yours truly,
ONLOOKER

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir.—Some days ago Messrs Rackman and Park were around our city asking for subscriptions to buy a Field Kitchen. Several parties I understand subscribed, but so far there has not been any acknowledgement of the amount collected, which I think should be through the Press, and the amount each party gave, and then they could see if any more was required.

Thanking you Mr. Editor for your kindness in publishing this letter, I remain,

Respectfully yours,
SUBSCRIBER.

BOMBARDING VILNA.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 18.—German aeroplanes are persistently bombarding the city of Vilna, about fifty miles east of Kovna. The possibility of the capture of Vilna by the Germans is foreseen in Petrograd, and operations preliminary to its evacuation are in progress. The Governor-General of Vilna has ordered the removal of equipments of factories, of banks, together with supplies of metals, including church bells, leather and everything else which might be useful to the invaders. Horses and live stock are being taken away.

Mrs. Bell May Have Been on Royal Edward

Mr. T. H. G. Bonne is greatly uneasy over the fact that his sister, Mrs. (Dr.) Bell of Winnipeg may have been on the transport Royal Edward, torpedoed in the Aegean Sea. She was attached to No. 2 Canadian Stationary Hospital, one of the three units reported as having recently sailed for the Dardanelles. However there is a probability that even if No. 2 Hospital was on the Royal Edward that it would have been landed either in Egypt or at Malta, likely the last-named place, which is being used as a base.

Old cane chairs when worn and stained can be greatly improved in appearance by the following method. First make a lather of strong soap and water to which has been added a little alcohol. Then when the cane is still wet, strew it well with flowers of sulphur and leave it until dry. The sulphur must then be thoroughly brushed off with a soft brush. Care must be taken that this is well done and that no powder is left in the cane of the chair.

King of Greece Has Arrived at An Understanding

With the Former Premier—Roumanian and Greek Ministers Call on Sir Edward Grey

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 18.—There has been continued activity among the diplomats in the Balkan capitals and among the Balkan representatives in other capitals. The Serbian Minister, who has been a frequent visitor at the Foreign Office, saw Sir Edward Grey again yesterday, while another caller was the Roumanian Minister. There have been no developments in the situation, however.

After a conference with King Constantine, former Premier Venizelos asked four days in which to study the situation before replying definitely to the request that he form a Cabinet, says a Reuter despatch from Athens. There is said to have been no restraint during the interview yesterday between the King and the Liberal leader such as has been reported at previous audiences. It is believed in Athens that the two have arrived at an understanding which is virtually complete.

As Yet Uncertain.

Later despatches from Athens indicate that the situation there is clouded with considerable uncertainty.

"King Constantine has asked Venizelos to form a new Ministry, but to continue the old policy," says the 'Graphic's correspondent. "If Venizelos declines this humiliating role a fresh dissolution of Parliament is threatened and a delay of more months may ensue."

'The Times' Athens representative sums up the situation thus:

"Until it is known whether Venizelos will succeed in forming a Cabinet, he cannot be said to have triumphed. Even should he become Premier, his sympathy for the allied cause might be hampered by circumstances which would preclude a return to the policy of Greek intervention which he advocated in March.

"Venizelos will not come to a decision regarding the offer of the Premiership until he has examined all the official documents bearing on the situation, but he appears disposed to facilitate an understanding with the King in order to avoid a fresh crisis."

Stable and Two Horses Are Burned In Fire at Lindsay

LINDSAY, Aug. 18. A frame stable with a concrete foundation belonging to Mr. Geo. Spencely of the place was de-troyed by fire at about twenty minutes to eleven last night. A Clyde stallion, eight years old, and a valuable driving horse were burned to death. Also a quantity of straw and a ton and a half of hay were destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencely were returning about eleven o'clock when Mrs. Spencely noticed the roof was in flames. The fire brigade was quickly summoned, but not before it was too late. Consequently the horses and contents were at the mercy of the flames. It is believed the fire was of an incendiary origin. The loss is estimated at two thousand dollars and there is comparatively little insurance.

Mr. Geo. Spencely is a son of Mr. Mark Spencely of the city, and is well known here. His many friends will be sorry to hear of his loss.

Russian Forces Must Now Defend Petrograd

The Austro-German Forces Are Battering at Brest-Litovsk

Take Verdun and End the War Says Crown Prince

Special Cable to The Examiner:

GENEVA, via Paris, Aug. 19.— The correspondent of the Journal de La Suisse, of Geneva, at the front in the Vosges, states that in an army order recently issued by the German Crown Prince and found on prisoners taken by the French occurs the following phrase:

"We shall take, we must take, Verdun. Then the war will be finished by December at the latest."

Stole to Pay For Funeral

Special to The Examiner:

Arthur Miller, clerk, of Portchester, N.Y., under arrest, told the police to-night that he took $1,200 worth of cut glass and silver belonging to his employer, Frank P. Palmer, New York stocker, to pay for his wife's funeral.

"In addition of my wife's insurance policy away, but the undertaker wants money. When the insurance was paid I would have taken these things out of pawn and back to the house," explained Miller.

Girl Cashier Robbed of $375

Two men who robbed Miss Rae Milchman of No. 321 Park Avenue, cashier for "Sol" Lehman, of No. 545 Broadway, of $375 yesterday, left no clues, fighters each other which also escaped. Miss Milchman had just returned from the Security Bank at No. 19 Grand street, when a man snatched the envelope containing the money. A spectator knocked him down. He dropped the envelope. A confederate picked it up. A general fight followed.

The Fall of the Russian Fortress of Kovno Makes Road Now Open to Vilna

Italian Army is Making a Vigorous Offensive Against Tolmino Which is Expected to Fall Soon---Relations Between Italy and Turkey Becoming More Strained.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

TRIUMPH FOR ENEMY.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The fall of the Russian fortress of Kovno is thought to be the triumph for Germany by military experts. The road is now open to Vilna and the Petrograd railway.

MILAN, Aug. 19.—The Italian army is making a vigorous offensive against Tolmino which is expected to fall soon. In the Tyrol the Italians captured many Austrians and munitions.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—Lord Kitchener with Millerand, the French War Minister, visited the French on Monday. Kitchener is assured of the co-operation of the French until the war is won.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The Zeppelin raid of yesterday proved a boom for recruiting. After visiting the scene of damage, recruiting stations were overwhelmed in parts.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Recent arrivals from England say fifty thousand Canadian troops of the Second Contingent have just been sent to France.

BUDAPEST, via Berlin, Aug. 19.—Italy, through the Italian Minister to Nish, has demanded that Serbian troops immediately evacuate the territory they have occupied in Albania, according to Sofia despatches yesterday. The Serbian Government is expected to ignore the demand and hostilities between the two powers is believed possible unless the Triple Entente intervenes.

ITALY AFTER TURKEY, TOO.

ROME, via Paris, Aug. 19.—The relations between Italy and Turkey are becoming more strained, and there are indications that a rupture is approaching. The Foreign Minister, Baron Sonnino, has made the most vigorous representations to the Turkish embassador concerning the matters in dispute, particularly Turkey's detention of Italian subjects.

It is understood that an appeal has been made to Washington through the American embassy to induce Turkey to carry out her promise to United States Ambassador Morgenthau at Constantinople that Italians be permitted to depart from Turkey. In this connection great interest has been aroused by the report that Mr. Morgenthau has despatched American ships to Beirut and Smyrna to facilitate the departure of Italians.

Instructions have been sent to the Italian embassy at Constantinople to obtain immediate satisfaction.

BRITISH GUARDS FOR CANADA'S GRAIN EXPORTS

OTTAWA, Aug. 18.— The British Government is apparently prepared to take the necessary steps to secure the safe carriage of Canada's surplus wheat crop across the Atlantic.

The Canadian Government, it was authoritatively stated to-day, has been asked to inform the British authorities as to the amount of wheat available for export and the extra tonnage required to carry it across the ocean.

The grain exporters of Canada, more particularly those of Montreal and other ocean ports, have been asked to prepare an estimate for the Government, which will be forwarded to the Imperial authorities.

The department's own estimate is that Canada will have 175,000,000 bushels of wheat for export.

THE KING'S PHYSICIAN A GERMAN SPY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 19.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd says:

"A despatch received here from Bucharest says that information arriving in the Roumanian capital from Sofia is to the effect that King Ferdinand has dismissed Dr. Groetzel, for twelve years his medical adviser, because he discovered that Dr. Groetzel was a German spy."

CANCER SERUM TESTS MADE ON 42 HUMANS

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—Announcement of the progress of another advance in the treatment of cancer, surpassing the investigations of the Rockefeller Institute, and in actual cases successfully treated and astonishing human heroes, instead of mice, was made yesterday on behalf of Dr. Silas P. Beebe, professor of experimental therapeutics in the Cornell Medical School.

The announcement was made by Dr. Beebe's associates and collaborators, Drs. J. Wallace Beveridge, G. J. Kleinmann, Jr., C. A. Moore, and W. E. Leach.

Priority is claimed for Dr. Beebe's methods not inferior to cures of cancers of animals over the names of Dr. James B. Murphy and John J. Morton of the Rockefeller Institute, whose findings along the same were published exclusively in yesterday's New York American.

Antedated by Dr. Beebe.

Dr. Beebe's claims the work of the Rockefeller scientists has been antedated by Dr. Beebe by a year, it is observed. He said the present advance of the Rockefeller experiments is not overestimated when the curative tests on mice were upset successfully to human beings.

The method of injecting serum in cases of cancerous growth claimed as original by Drs. Moore and Morton has been and is being tried in cases of men and women. Thirty apparently successful treatments were recently shown at the Polyclinic Hospital.

Grand Duke Must Abandon Brest-Litovsk Line in Order To Defend Petrograd

Assault on Brest-Litovsk, Main Base of Russian Field Armies and One of the Strongest Fortresses of Europe Has Begun---Believed It Will Fall Within a Fortnight.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 19.—An assault on Brest-Litovsk, the main base of the Russian field armies, and one of the strongest fortresses of Europe, has begun. The outer works are under an attack by Austro-German armies. Infantry divisions are closing in about the forts, and siege guns are being brought up to batter the inner defences.

Military men here to-day expressed the belief that Brest-Litovsk will be evacuated by the Russians, possibly with in a fortnight. The fall of Kovno, the advance of the Germans against Kovno-Brest-Litovsk railway, and the threat against Petrograd itself will make it necessary for the Grand Duke to abandon entirely the Brest-Litovsk line and wheel his armies northwards to defend the Russian capital, it is believed here. The official statement from Petrograd early to-day admitted the capture by Gen. Von Hindenburg of the principle defences of Kovno. A portion of the works on the right bank of the river are still held by the Russians, who are using the same tactics they employed upon the evacuation of Warsaw from their positions on the right bank. Russian artillery is covering the retreat of the Kovno garrison in the direction of Vilna railway centre toward which the German rush is directed. The Russian War Office early to-day admitted "stubborn fighting" south of Kovno with alternating successes. Petrograd also admitted heavy German attacks upon the forts of Novo Georgievsk, but declared there had been no change in the situation around Brest-Litvsk. Reports reached here that the Germans are transferring whole army corps from the southern to the northern front, and are preparing for a drive on Petrograd after seizing the railway at Vilna. In some quarters it is believed here that the movement through Kovno on Vilna is more than the effort to reach the Warsaw-Petrograd railway and turn the Russian flank.

The Germans, some London critics believe, plan to drive a wedge in the Russian line, east of Vilna and send armies marching to an attack on Petrograd while holding off the Russians to the south.

To meet this offensive movement it was pointed out here to-day the Grand Duke must evacuate Brest-Litovsk and retreat northward with his armies or leave the garrison in Brest-Litovsk to impede the movements of the Germans in the southeast.

Fund of Twenty Millions Raised in States to Start War

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The New York Herald yesterday morning gives prominence to a summary of Germany's secret activities in this country, as follows:

"Germany has raised $20,000,000 in this country since March and has used this money in an attempt to involve the United States in the war.

"Germany's expenses in maintaining offices in America from which its anti-British propaganda is directed are estimated at $16,000 a week.

"A shake-up in the German secret service in this country is expected as a result of the publication of the correspondence of German agents and sympathizers."

The Providence Journal says Germany, operating through Otto Kuhn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., fought to have the Ship Purchase bill passed, hoping to compel the purchase by the United States of the German merchant vessels now in New York harbour.

The Providence Journal laid before Washington officials evidence that the German Government tried, through the Telefunken Company, to obtain control of all wireless stations in the Philippines. It also says Dr. Frank, head of the Sayville Wireless Station, attempted to obtain the secret of the fire control system aboard American warships.

The New York World yesterday morning presented documentary evidence to prove that a German trade expert, while making frantic appeals to Washington to open the way for German imports through the British blockade, secretly advised his Government to discourage shipments.

"Washington officials declare citizens will be prosecuted under Federal statute for intriguing in favour of the German Government."

THE GERMANS SENT UP CHEERS FOR THE BRITISH

Examiner Special:

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 19 German cheers for men of the British navy is an unusual war-time incident reported from the North Sea by the captain and crew of the German trawler Gudrun, belonging in Altona, which has just arrived at Esbjerg.

The captain said that the Gudrun was stopped in the North Sea by a British squadron. He promptly put his boats ready and distributed lifebelts, believing his ship was certain to be sunk.

When the British seamen reached the trawler the captain begged for time to take to the boats, and admits that he was staggered at the short and pointed reply: "You can take the whole ship; we shall not harm you."

The captain adds that the British left amid the hearty cheers of the greatly relieved Germans.

(MADE IN CANADA)

—a palatable, nourishing food-drink, made of wheat, which rebuilds in Nature's own way.

The morning cup will be hot, snappy and just as satisfying with no hurt following if you have Postum in place of tea or coffee.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—requires thorough boiling to bring out its flavour and food value. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—the soluble form is prepared in the cup instantly with hot water. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious—cost per cup about the same—sold by grocers everywhere.

KNIFED

Old Soldier's Story of Coffee

An old soldier, released from coffee at 72, recovered his health and tells about it as follows:

"I stuck to coffee for years although it knifed me again and again." (Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it contains caffeine—the same drug found in coffee.)

"About eight years ago I was taken with a very severe attack of malarial fever. I would apparently recover and start about my usual work only to suffer a relapse. After this had been repeated several times during the year I was again violently ill.

"The Doctor said he had carefully studied my case and it was either quit coffee or die," advising me to take Postum in its place.

"I had always thought coffee one of my dearest friends, and especially when sick and I was very much taken back by the doctor's decision for I hadn't suspected the coffee I drank could possibly cause my troubles.

"I thought it over a few minutes and finally told the Doctor I would make the change. Postum was procured for me the same day and made according to directions. Well, I liked it and stuck to it and since then I have been a new man.

"The change in health began in a few days and surprised me, and now although I am seventy-two years of age I do lots of hard work and for the past month have been hauling, driving sixteen miles a day besides loading and unloading the wagon. That's what Postum in place of coffee has done for me. I now like the Postum as well as I did coffee.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

[illegible]

"Yes," sez he, "it's the only way."

"Is it because you think I couldn't stand hardship?" sez Kate.

"I don't want you to stand hardship," sez he.

"I think I know what the matter is," sez she, in a cold, hurt voice. "I told you I'd go with her and I meant it. I was willing to do anything that was best for you; but you wouldn't go with her. You have done everything you could to keep out of the clutches of the law and now it you save yourself up. I know it is because you care more for her after all. I have trained myself for the roughest sort of a life, just so that I would never fail you, and now if you go back you go back alone. I'm through with you."

Tom Smith turned to her and took both her hands in his. "Kate," he said in a husky voice, "you don't understand. I love you better than I ever could myself. I'm willing to do anything in all this world for you, even as Belle Stern did what she did. I know the race she'll lead those men, the chances she'll take, and I know that unless some accident happens she'll ride away from 'em as soon as their tired hosses give out altogether; but I can also look back and see her as she was when I first did see her, and she was just a shy girl, then. It's a wolf's life, Kate, and she has learned it well; but I don't want you to learn it — and I don't intend to let you.

"You're the only real thing in life to me, now, and I'm goin' to keep you real and true and good — it doesn't matter much what happens to me. I know that the law isn't fair an' the law isn't square; but it's the law, just the same, and I'm goin' to live inside of it for the rest of my life if I have to spend that life behind prison walls."

"And me," sez Kate, her voice tremblin', "where and how shall I spend my life? Oh, you have to come, I know that we can ride away to the west and down the line across the border. You have it all planned, and we will live without fear. Because we cross the border, we'll make our own world, we'll live our own life—you must, you must come with me."

"If we were always to stay young, sweetheart," sez Tom Smith, "that would be the way; but after a time they all yearn and hunger for the land that bars 'em out. I know, I have seen and talked to 'em; I know the risks they have run just to taste the old, sweet air that sweeps across the plains, the plains which used to be theirs. Oh, it can't be done, Kate, it can't be done."

They had forgot all about me and it was embarrassin' as could be.

"It can be done," sez she. "When you want to come back. I'll come with you. I'll share it all with you and never a word of reproach. All I ask is for you to lead a life that I can share, but if you go and live vicarish up, why you shut me away from you at once—an free will—and I'm not going back."

"Kate, Kate," pleaded Tom Smith; but I could see her shaking her head in the starlight.

Just then an idee struck me and I grabbed hold of it and waved it on high. "If you two chaps stand talkin' there much longer, it'll be next week and they'll have time to come up from Mexico and clean from Leavenworth and take you in style wherever you decide to go, but what you'll do it you have one grain of sense left between you is to go on over to old Josiah Cornell's this minute and let him do your thinkin' for you. He's back, now, and that is exactly what you got to do. We are only about three miles out and I'll be willin' to walk a hundred miles just to get rid of you."

Well, they jumped at it, and we started right then, Tom Smith on Flames' hoss and the kid behind me on Starlight—some distance in the rear, and me givin' him eloquent advice on the utter doggone foolishness of ever seein' him led me another feller's love affair.

Mrs. G. A. M. Knight, McDowell, Man., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for years, and I would not be without it in the house. I was very bad with dysentery, a friend gave me a bottle of Dr. Fowler's, and told me to get a bottle right away, which I did, and it did me lots of good. My brother was bad too, and I told him to get it, and he was cured. I hope there are others who will get Dr. Fowler's and keep it in the house, for it will surely cure Doctor's bill."

"Do they allus grab each other an' act silly as them two?" sez Flames in a thoughtful tone.

People in love haven't any idea what they're doin', an' you haven't any right to judge 'em," sez I, by reproach. "They must wander around like geese in a blizzard, moanin' an' groanin' and stroking' each other's hands; and some of their friends allus have to keep 'em in mind so as to get 'em inside when it starts to rain and then to keep 'em from walkin' in open fireplaces and such. But there's one thing I want you to remember, recollect and bear in mind, and that is that when you're out with me you're not to see anything unless I tell you to."

"Humph!" sez Flames.

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE.
The End of the Story.

We found quite a lot [illegible] when we arrived. It seems they had been lightin' out. Kate had had quite a little scene with her male relations, they havin' the idee that it was no place to be neck and lowly, and she defendin' the notion that as long as she was the one that had to live on her bit she ort to have the privilege of doin' some of the plannin'. Fathers and brothers are narrow-minded critters when it comes to their own private women-folks, and Kate had banged the door after her when she went out to what they supposed was a little private weep in the moonlight.

Then old Josiah had come back with his face full o' grim satisfaction and he had scolded 'em some for leavin' drove Kate out o' doors, and had gone out to hunt her and then gone back in to rawhide 'em proper for drivin' her plumb off the place, and he was just finishin' this and was getting ready to give the wolf-dogs some more trailin', when we arrived at the scene of action.

I selected a place outside for Flames, and then I slipped into the sittin'-room so I could keep eases on what was goin' on. Old man Kastle and his son Douglas came out flat-footed again' marriage, and when Tom Smith sided in with 'em with even more reasons again' it 'n they'd had to begin with, why, it looked like the end o' the string sure enough, and Kate just stood and looked as though [illegible] men think they were so tarnal competent.

Then old Josiah chipped in and told 'em that he never had heard of very much luck comin' from crossin' a gel's love, and that when a man who loved a gel found an excuse to not marry in' her, he thought it was high time for that man to be given his bread and milk and put to bed. He went on to say that this was Kate's home as long as she chose to keep it and she was free to say just what she pleased in it and no one else could speak except as she so directed.

Then he came out into the sittin'-room and flopped himself into a chair right across from me, me bein' in the shadow, and him [illegible] where the light from the room fell full on his fine old face with the gray whiskers trimmed down to it. He had spoke full o' feelin' and I straight eased the shoulder, and as I knew his story and that of the other old man in the bedroom, I sat with my eyes on the eyes of the old hermit, and I got more entertainment watchin' the lights and shadows come to 'em than in listenin' to the talk in the other room.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Twice Married

But the Second Wedding Was Very Different From the First.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

He had various names, but none of them was so widely used as The Eel. It had been given him to denote that he was extremely slippery. He had been cornered a number of times, but on each and every occasion he had slipped through the fingers of those who were attempting to hire him. He had victimized both men and women, especially winning the latter without half trying. He had married a number of them, got possession of what money they possessed and then lit out. He was a good fighter, and when he could not get out of a sheriff's clutches by chicanery he would put up a defense that had thus far saved him from conviction.

I was sheriff of Union county when one morning one of the women he had married came into town, having ridden twenty miles to bring the information that The Eel was working among the settlers about Hobson, where she had seen him, though, she having been one of his first wives and he having married so many since, he did not recognize her. Instead of making herself known to him, she had brought us the news of his presence in Hobson that an effort might be made to capture him.

It occurred to me that as one of his victims and therefore impervious to his fascinations she might aid in his capture. But it was probable that if he came into close contact with her he would remember her. I therefore proposed that she should give herself a darker complexion and wear a wig of different hair than her own. The complexion she could manage, but wigs were scarce in that country, and some other means of changing her hair must be found.

She entered into my scheme heart and soul. There was a drug store in the town at which she purchased a complexion and a hair dye, and from a blond converted herself into a pronounced brunette. She was a young woman, not too old to pass for my daughter. I made up as a farmer looking for a place to settle and buy land. I provided myself with arms, but I concealed them under my clothes. I also took with me several packages of paper cut to the size and shape of a bank bill and on the top of each package placed a real bank bill. I planned that The Eel should endeavor to get these packages through my supposed daughter, and I might lay a trap to take him while he was doing so.

Belle Ashurst—that was the girl's name—and I started on horseback for Hobson one morning and reached it in the middle of the afternoon. We rode up to the tavern and my attention was attracted to a man about thirty-five years of age sitting on the porch in a chair tilted against the house, smoking a long cigar. There was nothing noticeable about him to one not used to dealing with dishonest characters, but there was something in his eye that told me at once he was our quarry.

Belle and I dismounted and went into the house, where I registered as Peter Hunker of Independence, Mo. Till supper time I contented myself with asking the landlord for information about the surrounding country, the character of the soil and if there was any property for sale. While we were talking The Eel came in and I told the landlord in his presence that I had $3,000 in currency with me to put into land. The Eel, who was posing as Mr. Jefferson McCormick, joined in the conversation and said he knew a man who had a farm that was about to be sold out under a foreclosure of mortgage and could be bought dirt cheap. I told him that I would be greatly obliged to him for the information.

While we were talking the supper bell rang, and down came Belle Ashurst. I introduced Mr. McCormick to her, and she received him very cordially. I asked him to join us at supper. He accepted the invitation, and I gave him a seat on one side of Belle, while I sat on the other side of her. I watched him when she first spoke to him, fearing that her voice would give her away. I saw him look up at her quickly, but she was so well disguised that I doubted if she had betrayed herself.

After supper we went into the lounging room, where I left Belle and Mr. McCormick, while I sauntered about the town. When I went back to the tavern I saw McCormack and Belle sitting together, and they had evidently got pretty thick. When Belle saw me she excused herself to him and, coming out, joined me. She had restrained herself very well, but she told me that her desire to lash the villain for his perfidy was so great that she was glad of an excuse to get away from him. He had used the same blandishments with which he had won her several years before.

I told her that on her preserving her equanimity and playing her part well depended our securing his capture and her revenge. She promised to control herself. She had succeeded in pretending to be much pleased with Mr. McCormick. He had asked her to go for a ride with him the next morning, and she had told him she would do so provided her father would consent. I took the matter under consideration and the next morning told her she might go. I suggested that she say to McCormick that she was interested in her father's buying property and ask him to point out any that he knew was for sale.

When Belle came back from her ride she told me that her companion had made violent love to her, telling her that it was a case of love at first sight, that the moment he saw her he knew they were made for each other. She had responded so far as her indignation would permit and acknowledged that she was very much pleased with him.

Several days passed, during which I was laying a plan for The Eel's capture. I knew he was armed to the teeth and, unless I could contrive to get his arms away from him, I could not take him without a fight. On one occasion a sheriff had got a drop on him and called on him to throw up his hands. The Eel had obeyed, but had swung his right arm up so vigorously as to throw a derringer into his hand, with which he had shot the sheriff. I must either kill the rascal or take him alive. If I took him alive I proposed to effect the capture through the machinations of Delilah.

It was well I had announced that I had money, for I learned that McCormick had been courting another girl in Hobson, and bait was needed to draw him away from her. My funds succeeded. Belle very soon informed me that she had promised to marry him—provided I gave my consent. I held an interview with the proposer, in which I told him that Belle was the apple of my eye and I wouldn't give her to any man who couldn't give a good account of himself. But when he came to his account of himself I accepted it without asking for references and told him that I would give my daughter the money I had brought with me for a dowry and that I had plenty more in Missouri, where I had come from. I asked him when he intended to be married, and he said the sooner the better. I told him I would talk with my daughter, but she might do as she pleased in the premises.

I conferred with Belle, and it was she who laid the plan we carried out. Having been already married to him, she had no objections to marrying him again. As his wife she could the more easily entice me to land him, and she did not see how she could do so except as his wife. All possible suspicion of her or me would be averted by a marriage ceremony.

McCormick being in a great hurry for the ceremony, after pretending to demur at the suddenness of the affair I consented that it should take place at once. A justice of the peace was called in, and Belle, after embracing me while I wiped forced tears from my eyes, stood up with the man beside whom she had once stood under similar circumstances before, and the justice performed the ceremony.

As soon as it was over I wiped away some more tears, and, taking out the packages of blank paper, each faced with a bank bill, I handed them to the bride. She threw her arms around me, then, tossing the packages on a table, turned and embraced her husband.

It was arranged that the pair were to spend their honeymoon at the tavern, and the landlord had prepared the best chamber in the house for them. Belle had arranged with me that I should take position in the hall near the door of their room, and by signal she would indicate that she had secured the groom's arms. Then I was to enter the chamber with a pistol in each hand and make the capture. The signal was to be a fit of coughing on the part of the bride.

The pair had been in the bridal room for about fifteen minutes when I heard the signal. I turned the knob of the door and threw it open. The groom was standing near the door. Belle was beside the bureau on which lay two bulldog pistols, which she was examining with feigned curiosity. I sprang between her and him, a revolver in each of my hands, and told him that if he moved a finger he was a dead man. Belle took up the bulldogs and also leveled them at him.

"You don't know me, do you?" she said fiercely. "I'm Sarah Simpson. We've been married before. The first time I didn't know you. This time I know you well. This gentleman who has been playing my father is the sheriff of Union county. I saw you come into this town to play some more of your games and laid a trap for you. Reckon you won't marry any more wives."

She burst into a flood of tears, while I motioned the man to leave the room, and marched him downstairs, with a pistol pressed between his shoulders. The landlord's surprise was a sight to behold. When I told him that I had captured The Eel he swore that the villain should not leave the town alive. Rushing out, he spread the news of the capture, men came running in, and a cry was raised:

"Hang him!"

The fellow who had not hesitated to break the law so often and had defied officials, seeing himself disarmed in the face of infuriated men, some of whose relatives had been his victims, turned pale, shivered and begged for mercy.

"No mercy for you!" cried a man whose sister he had married. "You showed no mercy to any one else, and you'll get none yourself, and don't you forget it!"

He was so slippery that I was not very sorry when a posse took him out of my hands and ended his career at the end of a rope attached to the limb of a tree. Belle, or Sarah Simpson, had not made up her mind to this and begged that he be spared, but the men would not listen to her.

THEY ENJOY A FIGHT.

Tommy Atkins and Jack Tar Take Hardship Lightheartedly.

Nothing more clearly shows the excellent spirit of our brave soldiers than the light-hearted manner in which hardship, and even death itself, is faced. The man who marches to action with a rollicking song on his lips, who finds nicknames for the very guns hurling destruction at him, and who makes a jest even of his own sufferings, is a hard man to beat.

First and last, Tommy Atkins is a sportsman, and even when engaged in the grim game of war he cannot forget entirely the pastimes of peace, as witness the following incident: One of our batteries was firing at a building occupied by the enemy, and our lads in the trenches watched the proceedings eagerly. At the third discharge the target crumpled up like a house of cards, and a prostrate spectator flung up his arms excitedly and yelled "Goal! Hardy himself couldn't have stopped that one."

Again, when at Mons the long days of retreat became days of advance for our troops, a jubilant British private described the situation tersely as "Half time. Change over." Another football enthusiast, limping painfully away from the firing-line, answered a sympathetic inquiry with a smile, and the explanation, "Got fouled in the penalty area."

That magnificent bit of marksmanship, when H. M. S. Birmingham shot away the periscope of a German submarine, was aptly described by one of the crew, who remarked, "Well bowled. Just took the bail nicely."

During the early days of the war the scarcity of blankets was a frequent topic in the trenches. "I hear there'll be a lot of chaps without blankets to-night," said one Tommy. No sooner had he spoken than a perfect hurricane of lead swept over them. "If we get much o' this there'll be blankets without men, I'm thinking," came the grim reply.

A private in the trenches, raising himself to get a glimpse of the foe, had his sleeve ripped open by a bullet. "Well, I'll be darned," he said, quizzically. Another, on being told by his pal that they were facing a million of the enemy, took careful aim, fired, and replied, "No, lad, only 999,999."

Two riflemen were discussing the enormous amount of lead used daily, and one suggested the possibility of a shortage. "No fear," said his chum. "Lead's economical stuff; you can make a little go a long way." It was an Irishman who, on hearing that the German soldiers have an aversion to "cold steel," promptly retorted, "Sure, then, we'll just make it hot for them."

German Critic Admits French Have "Will to Conquer"

In a frank review of the conditions faced throughout the present war by Germany and contributed to the Berliner Tageblatt, Major Moraht says: "It must be admitted that the French have used every conceivable variation of tactics. They have tried to surprise us, to mislead us, to beat us hand to hand fights, and to overwhelm us by masses. What the French in the campaign of 1870 avoided in the greatest degree namely, hand-to-hand fights with the German infantry they now seek with elan as a means of decision. That shows their will to conquer. The French Army also seems to well in hand."

The Kaiser's Snub

In the "Nouvelle Revue" Paul Louis Hervier tells the following story of the Kaiser.

After his last visit to Paris King Alfonso of Spain went to Berlin, where a great military review was held. The King of Spain attended wearing the uniform of a Prussian colonel. On his dolman was an almost invisible spot of coffee. The young king saluted the Kaiser and said: "Sire, the King of Spain, who is also a Prussian colonel, awaits the orders of your majesty."

"If the colonel of my regiment," the Kaiser responded icily, "were not King of Spain I should not hesitate to inform him that on his uniform I see a very conspicuous spot of French coffee."

Without a moment's hesitation King Alfonso replied: "That proves, Sire, that the King of Spain has made a mistake of laying aside his uniform of a Spanish general and that I shall lose no time in putting it on again." Whereupon he saluted stiffly, and walked away.

WRECK OF ENGLISH SMACK

The inhabitants of Brighton, England, had a very interesting sight when the fishing smack Shamrock was driven ashore by a gale. The crew was rescued with great difficulty. The picture shows the little vessel, which had eluded German submarines for months, driven high up on the sands.

Heroic Mustache.

Probably no dog has ever rendered such signal military service or been so honorably recognized as the celebrated poodle Mustache, who shared the victorious fortunes of the French army through most of the wars of the consulate and of the French empire. He won special honors at Marengo and was decorated on the battlefield of Austerlitz by Marshal Lannes as a reward for having rescued his regimental standard from an Austrian soldier when in the act of snatching it from the grasp of the standard bearer as he fell mortally wounded. The plucky poodle drove off the assailant, and then, seizing the tattered colors in its teeth, dragged them triumphantly till he reached his own company.

A Lucky Illness.

It was owing to an illness that Sir Laurence Alma-Tadema became a painter. He was educated with the intention of making him a lawyer, but sickness cut his studies short. When confined to his bed he relieved the tedium by making little sketches. These showed so much ability that when he was well again he readily obtained his mother's permission to devote himself to painting.

The Prince and the Captain.

The admiral commanding the British Mediterranean squadron a number of years ago gave a dinner to the captains of the fleet at Malta. By 6.45 most of the captains had reached the flagship, been received on deck by the admiral and ushered below. Next the Duke of Edinburgh arrived. The admiral received him and, keeping him in conversation, continued to pace the deck. All subsequent arrivals were duly ushered below to the saloon, but still the admiral kept the duke on deck. At last it occurred to the duke that the dinner hour had been passed, and he ventured to inquire if his host was waiting for anybody.

"Yes," replied the admiral, "I am waiting for the captain of the"—

Instantly the duke took the hint, called for a boat and made posthaste for his own ship. He alone among the captains of the fleet had turned up in ordinary evening clothes, forgetting or not knowing that the dinner was official. On his return to the flagship in the quickest time on record and in full uniform the gallant but infallible admiral was still pacing the deck and, deprecating his royal highness' profuse apologies, conducted him to dinner.

How To Clean Gloves at Home

To wash gloves successfully it is necessary to have dry cleaning fluid, but this can be obtained at any drug store. Most people dislike the odor of gasoline, but benzine is not objectionable. Procure a pint of benzine and a cake of castile soap. Shave the soap into a pint of boiling water and let it dissolve. Add a tablespoonful of ammonia and a teaspoonful of borax. Let this mixture cool.

Put on the gloves and wash them in the benzine, rubbing the soiled parts with the soap suds. Rinse in clean benzine and hang to dry. Do not wring them. Shake them out and pull them into shape. Dry in the open air, but not in the sun.

Cleaning gloves with gasoline is not advisable, as it is very inflammable and dangerous. Benzine is safer.

Another way to clean gloves is to put them on the hands and wash them with soap and water. Rub them dry with a towel and then rub them with corn meal. Shake off the meal and pull the gloves into shape.

Chamois gloves may be washed in soap suds and rinsed in clear water. Dry them and rub with corn meal.

Kid gloves may be cleaned in the following manner:

Rub the gloves with oatmeal to which a little powdered alum has been added. Wipe this off with a dry cloth and the gloves will be ready to wear again.

When washing white silk gloves do not rub the soap directly on the gloves but make a suds and wash them in that. The water should be like warm, not hot. Then rinse in cold water. A dash of bluing added to the rinsing water will keep them bright. Hang in a dark closet to dry instead of in the sunshine. Do not iron them but pull them into shape. In case they get soiled in the wearing at once wrap them in clean paper and lay away. Always

Good-bye flashed back Mamorie, accompanying the door. "I am going right home to clean every one many pairs, and I will let you know how I succeed."

YOUR TROUBLES.

John Wesley was once walking with a brother, who related to him his troubles, saying he did not know what he should do. They were at that moment passing a stone wall, over which a cow was looking.

"No," replied the one in trouble.

"I will tell you," said Wesley. "It is because she cannot look through it. And that is what you must do with your troubles—look over and above them."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

THE MIDDY BLOUSE OF TO-DAY.

By Anabel Worthington.

Even so simple a garment as the middy blouse has met with small changes which make it somewhat more novel than in those of yore. The middy of to-day is somewhat shorter than last year's, with the lower edge a trifle narrow and so arranged that it may either hang loosely on the hips or be gathered on an elastic or a tape band. The neck is quite open, with the sailor collar, but greater convenience has been provided by opening the blouse down the front, instead of slipping it on over the head. The sleeves remain small, and either long or short. They are set in at the shoulder with a seam that is stitched on the outside what our French cousins call a piqué seam. There is a small applied yoke which may be placed across the shoulders in the back or omitted. It adds character to the blouse as well as strength so that it is well to use it.

No material ever meets the young girls' approval for this blouse quite as surely as duck. It is certainly ideal, and near it is linen. Other fabrics can be used, for we have seen some lovely blouses in this style made of pongee and of poplin, but it seems more suitable for the rough and ready characteristics of duck and similar sailor fabrics.

The blouse pattern, No. 7213, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 2⅞ yards of 36 inch material with 4⅝ yards of braid.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age if a child.

Price 15 cents or 2 for 25c.

"AS YOU DO AT HOME."

Men Quickly Learn to Live and Sleep Through Noise of Guns.

Writing to The London Times an officer of a Sikh regiment presents an unusually clear picture of life as it is lived by soldiers in the trenches. He says:

The last nine days we have been in the firing line, he begins. There one exists in strong, deep, narrow trenches. The top of the trench is loopholed for firing, and below—inside—is a banquette, or step, on which the men stand when they are shooting. Behind this, and a little lower, comes the bottom of the trench, up and down which one walks about, and where one is about five and one-half feet or more underground. In our last trenches we labored incessantly and got the whole of the bottom of our trench paved with bricks from ruined houses in rear of the position. The men had little caves, or dug-outs, in the front wall of the trench, in which to lie down, and in the rear wall little fireplaces for cooking and drying their clothes. Leading away from the firing line are what we call communication trenches, up which come our rations from the rear, and our water. We are well fed and cook our own meals and wash up our own plates, etc., such as they are. For drink they supply us with the wine of the country or rum, but I confine my own potations to quantities of tea or cocoa, which we get in plenty. From the ruined houses behind one can collect all sorts of treasures—knives, forks, stewpots, wood, coal and all sorts of things that make existence bearable.

The officers' dugout is just an improvement on the men's—if they care to have it made so. I had a shelter built over the top of my last one, and two sacks hanging from it to keep out the rain. A fireplace in front and the two blankets and a waterproof sheet that we take with us in the trenches, plus my coat and waterproof, kept me warm and dry. In fact there we were well off. In the first place where I joined the regiment things were different. There was no dry banquette for the men to fire from and nothing had been done to pave the bottom of the trench, so one walked up and down in the mud and never had dry or warm feet. It rained continually and we had no fires. My dugout leaked and at night I used to get out in the trench from time to time and "mark time" in the mud to try to get warm. However, we are getting experts at making ourselves comfortable, and I don't suppose we will be so badly off again.

The Germans live in similar conditions and trenches in front of us. In our last position their front line was in one place about 200 yards away and their nearest trench was only 50 yards off, so there we had a pretty hot corner. A few men all along our line are always on the lookout and fire from time to time to keep the enemy down. The rest remain in their dugouts in readiness in case of attack, and cook, eat and sleep. The Germans play the same game, so night and day this sniping goes on incessantly.

From time to time the enemy's guns open fire—usually at regular hours of the day—and keep it up for about half an hour. One even learns to know what is coming. There is the shrapnel with its quick passage through the air, the loud bang as it explodes overhead, and the sharp whistle of the shrapnel bullets through the air. There is the distant stately boom of the big gun of the "Black Maria" type, followed by the long drawnout whistling sound of the heavy shell lumbering through the air—slowly, as one would imagine from the sound—like some huge humble bee complaining of the task of having to travel so far, and ending in a loud "crump" as it bursts on the ground, throwing up clouds of mud and black smoke. These big shells give one plenty of warning by their sound, and one soon gets to know where they are going. The rifle fire from in front sounds like the sharp crack of a whip, and always there is the heavier bang of our own men firing in reply. Our guns fire off and on, and make wonderfully good practice. They drop heavy shells from far behind us on to the German trenches, and now and then give them a dose of shrapnel. And through all this noise one soon learns to live and sleep—just as you do at home.

Slinging Bullets.

In the ancient times bullets were not shot out of rifles, but from slings, which were very dangerous weapons in the hands of skilled warriors.

Acorn-shaped bullets of lead have been found in the ancient Roman fort at Ambleside, near Windermere. Hitherto the sling-bullets have only been found on one other Romano-British site, the hill site of Birrenswalk in Dumfriesshire.

In his "Report on the Exploitation of the Roman fort at Ambleside," Professor Haverfield refers to the lake district in Roman times as "a tangled chaos of hills in which wild hillmen defied Rome and Roman ways," and to the Roman fort in Borranesfield as "a strategic point on a distant frontier."

Subway for London Mail.

A nine-foot tunnel is to be constructed in London for the conveyance of mail, says The Scientific American. It will contain two tracks with island platforms at the eight stations from Paddington to Whitechapel, inclusive. The trains will be run without operators from distant control stations at an average speed of twenty-five miles per hour. At the island platforms there will be electric elevators to transfer the mails to the sorting offices.

Spy Devices.

German spies in the field use a crude picture of a black cow to impart intelligence to their troops of what is ahead. The size of the cow and the direction of her head indicates the proportions of the enemy and its location. If the cow's head points up it means look out for aeroplanes.

Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark have free access to Germany. To those four neutral countries American exports last month were $24,300,000, compared with $11,900,000 in June of last year.

Too Great a Strain.

Every once in awhile the actor while taking the part of a dude in a play would spend large sums of his stage money. How to Serve Potatoes.

Potatoes should always be served in an uncovered dish. If it is necessary for them to stand for a few minutes before being served cover them with a cloth, not a lid, in order that the steam as it condenses may be absorbed by the cloth and not returned to the potatoes to make them soggy and hard to digest.

Cuba's Rich Soil.

In some of the islands of the West Indies there are areas of cane which have yielded fair crops for twenty years without replanting. In Cuba the most progressive planters usually allow no more than five or six "ratoon" crops, the fields being then replanted. The soil is so rich that rotation of crops has apparently not been found necessary.

Modern Methods.

"Nothing that art can do rivals the work of nature," said the enthusiastic youth. "What could be more beautiful than the constellations?"

"They are pretty," assented the unimaginative girl. "And yet do you honestly think that a constellation gets to the popular intelligence like a good, snappy electric light sign?"—Kansas City Star.

Capitalist (just rescued from the water)—Well, I'm much obliged to ye for hauling me out of the water, an' here's 3s. 4d. for ye, all the change I've got about me now. Life Saver—Oh, no; keep your money. I wouldn't think of robbing you. Capitalist—Not 'tall, not 'tall! 'Twonld have been lost anyhow if ye hadn't rescued me.—London Punch.

Good Reason.

"I want you to be nice to the Greens tonight."

"Now, why do you insist on that? You know I have no use for either of them."

"I know, but I've just looked over the guests at this party, and the Greens are the only people here who own a car who go home our way."—Detroit Free Press.

Editors and Writers.

Nowadays in editorial offices it is not, in the wise old way, "Let us get as good a story as possible from Rudyard Kipling," but "Let us buy a Kipling story"—as one would say "Let us buy a yard of ribbon." We do not desire so much the heart of a writer as his outward seeming. We want names, not stories.—Bookman.

A Match For It.

"We have islands a mile in circumference composed entirely of sulphur," boasted the man from New Zealand.

"You ought to see our big trees," came back the American. "You could pick up one of those islands on the tip of one of our trees and let it serve as the head of a match."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Legal Circle.

This, then, is the legal circle; to make more laws to require more lawyers to bring more lawsuits to have more decisions rendered to increase the general contempt for law to cure that contempt by making more laws to require more lawyers to bring more lawsuits, and so forth even unto the third and fourth degenerations.—Life.

Early Polish.

At least one little girl in New York is in line for a diplomatic position when the government decides to admit feminine aspirants to the corps. She was sitting on a park bench the other afternoon in company with another child about her own age. There was evidently some disagreement between them, and suddenly the discreet maiden turned to her obnoxious companion, smiled sweetly and said, "Well, if one of us should get off this seat I'd have more room."—New York Post.

Good Wifeship.

Bobby Burns, who will be remembered as a Scotch plowman who wrote a poem now and then, once set down his opinion of a good wife as follows: "The scale of good wifeship I divided in ten parts—good nature, four; good sense, two; wit, one; personal charm namely, sweet face, eloquent eyes, fine limbs, graceful carriage, all these, one. As for the other qualities, such as fortune, connection and education more than the ordinary run, family, blood, etc., divide the two remaining degrees as you please."—Exchange.

Foreign Objects in the Lungs.

Sir William Milligan exhibited at a recent meeting of the Royal Society of Medicine a damson stone, a carpet tack and a coin, all of which had been inhaled into the lungs and been removed with forceps after several days of suffering on the part of the persons who had been foolish enough to put them into their mouths.

Figures of Speech.

"Of what mathematical term does marriage remind you?"

"Multiplication, of course."

"Right. And divorce?"

"Why, division."

"Certainly. What term, then, would you apply to grass-widowhood?"

"I suppose that would have to be called an improper fraction."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Heredity.

Fond Parent—That youngster of mine is beginning already to have the family traits. You know we gave him a stop watch for a birthday present? Friend—Yes. Fond Parent—Well, sir, within half an hour of the time he first got hold of that timepiece he had found a bowl of water and put it in soak.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Changed Views.

"Time makes a big difference."

"What are you thinking of?"

"My wife's father. I used to think him a stubborn old fool. Now I respect his judgment."

"What's happened?"

"Nothing; only he did his durndest to prevent my eloping with his daughter."—Detroit Free Press.

Land of the Date Palm.

Beyond the land of the Berbers, in the far south of Morocco, lies the great oasis of Tafilet, famous for its vast groves of date palms. Here for hundreds of square miles the land is covered with a thick growth of the tall, straight stems of the palm, and the product of these close growing trees is enormous in quantity. They produce the finest dates in the world.

Whistler's Comment.

One of Whistler's proofs, sold by Sotheby's in 1888—that of an early etching—brought a good price, not on its merits, but for this line by the artist, written on the margin: "Legs not by me, but a fatuous addition by a general practitioner."

The "legs" were by Dr. Seymour Haden, Whistler's eminent brother-in-law.

Bare Poles.

Purser—Don't go on deck, madam. It is stormy, and we are running her with bare poles.

Aunt Polly—Well, I suppose that, coming from such a cold country as Poland, they can stand running round naked, but I think it's downright scandalous to let 'em do it.—London Telegraph.

Fast and Slow.

The Father—I learn with sorrow, my son, that you are getting to be what they term quite fast.

The Son—You shouldn't believe all you hear, dad. I'll introduce you to a man who will tell you another story.

The Father—And who is he?

The Son—My tailor. He says I'm the slowest chap he's got on his books.

Athletic Exercises.

Flattered Restaurant Keeper—I'm glad to hear, sir, that you've been growing so strong since you began coming to my restaurant.

Fullett—Well, it's a fact. You see, my habits are sedentary, and I can't afford to enter a gymnasium. Yes, sir; your steaks and roast fowls are making a new man of me.

How Welshwomen Carry Their Babies.

The quaint old Welsh way in which Swansea women carry their babies attracts every one's notice when visiting that town for the first time. A big shawl over the right shoulder is drawn down to the left hip, where the two ends of the shawl are met and held together, forming a sort of pouch or pocket, in which the baby snuggles cosily and safely. Its weight is so supported by the hip and distributed by the shawl over the whole upper part of the body that there is no strain at all nor any tiring of the arms. This probably accounts for the upright carriage of the Welsh mother.—London Telegraph.

The Dean's Retort.

One Sunday morning at his church Dean Hole noticed a tipsy man in the congregation. He bore his presence until it was no longer possible and then came to a halt with the question, "Are you fit to remain in God's house?"

The man got up unsteadily and was helped to the door by a parishioner who made himself useful in emergencies.

"James," said Hole after the service was over, "what did you do with that man?"

The useful parishioner replied, "I put him on a omnibus, sir."

The indignant vicar's retort was, "Couldn't you have put him under it?"

PARALYZED LIMBS.

Today it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hornburger, 16 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed my work. I was for 20 years."

What Thin Folks Should Do To Gain Weight

Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women.

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh makers, food fads, physical culture stunts and "rub on creams," begin to realize that nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered regenerative force makes fat grow after years of thinness, and is also unequaled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Six strength-giving, fat producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.

A few days' treatment with Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten and the additional fats that thin people need are provided. The leading druggists supply Sargol, and say there is a large demand for it.

While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve tonic and vitalizer it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Summer Skin Troubles

Sunburn, blisterings, and irritation are the commonest forms of summer skin troubles, and Zam-Buk ends these very quickly. It works in two ways. As soon as applied, its antiseptic powers get to work and kill all the poison in a wound or sting or sore. This generally ends the smarting and the pain. Then Zam-Buk begins the healing process, and fresh, healthy tissue is built up. For sore, blistered feet, sore hands, heat rashes, baby's heat spots, sore places due to perspiration, etc., you can't equal Zam-Buk. It also cures cuts, ulcers, abscesses, piles, and all inflamed and diseased conditions of skin and subcutaneous tissue. Druggists and stores everywhere sell Zam-Buk, 50c. box. Use Zam-Buk Soap also, 25c. per tablet. All stores or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

FRENCH MAKE IMPORTANT GAIN AT ARRAS

MORE TROOPS LANDED AT THE DARDANELLES

MORE BRITISH FORCES HAVE LANDED ON THE PENINSULA

"Fighting Has Been Very Severe" Reports General Hamilton and the Losses on Both Sides Are Very Heavy"... French Have Captured Important Cross Roads Near Notre Dame de Lorette.

ITALIANS ATTACK ON THE WHOLE FRONT

Special Cable to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Under a heavy attack by Turks, the British have landed more troops on the shores of Sulva Bay, General Hamilton reported to the War Office this afternoon.

"The fighting has been very severe," cabled the British commander. "The losses on both sides are very heavy."

IMPORTANT FRENCH VICTORY.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The most important French victory in the fighting north of Arras in several weeks was announced by the War Office this afternoon. The French have captured the cross roads east of Notre Dame de Lorette, through which Arras-Bethune and the Angres-Ablain highways run. The position held by the Germans throughout the winter months, and strongly fortified, formed salient in the French lines. Its capture by infantry charges, accompanied by showers of bombs and grenades, puts the French in a position to direct effective attacks against the Germans north and north-east of Souchez.

Driven from the cross roads yesterday afternoon, the Teutons counter-attacked several times during the night in an effort to recapture the position, but were repulsed. Other German attacks north of Chateau Carleul were repulsed. Between the Oise and the Aisne, on the Plateau of Quesnievres, south of Arras and around Nouvron, violent cannonading continued throughout last night. French batteries in each of these engagements proved themselves masters of the enemy's artillerymen. "Violent fighting continues on the summit of Lingekopf in the Vosges. We have taken new trenches on the crest of Schratzmaenle."

ROME, Aug. 19. - A heavy bombardment of the Austrian forts before Goritiz and infantry assaults south and west of Tolmino mark the beginning of a determined attempt by Genera Cadorna to break the whole Austrian front along the Isonzo. North-west of Goritiz a regiment of Bersaglieri rushed several trenches between San Martino and Bighana, inflicting heavy losses. Later they were forced to relinquish the ground under an artillery attack from an adjacent height.

Santa Lucia, defending Tolmino from the south, is under violent attack. Official despatches report the capture of more Austrian trenches and 200 prisoners.

WHITE STAR LINER "ARABIC" IS SUNK BY GERMAN SUB.

Big Steamer Bound From Liverpool to New York Is Destroyed Forty Miles From the Grave of the Lusitania --Most of Crew and Passengers Saved.

Special Cable:

LONDON, Aug. 19.—It was officially announced this afternoon that the White Star liner Arabas was sunk by a German submarine off Fastnet, forty miles from the Lusitania's grave. It sank in eleven minutes.

The Arabic was proceeding westward on her voyage from Liverpool to New York, when she was torpedoed. Despatches say she was not far from the Irish coast. It is reported some lives were lost. She carried a crew of 260.

A message from Liverpool said that the crew was saved, but said nothing of passengers. Earlier reports reaching shipping circles said that the crew and probably most of the passengers were saved. One report was that practically all the passengers and crew were taken off by another steamer.

The White Star liner Arabic was carrying 435 passengers and crew when torpedoed and sunk off the south-west coast of Ireland, near Fastnet, this morning. Contradictory reports reached here this afternoon as to the fate of the passengers and the crew. First despatches said all the passengers and crew had been saved, the same as the report received here immediately after the Lusitania had been sunk. Immediately afterward Liverpool said a report was in circulation there, that "some lives had been lost." Unconfirmed reports said practically all the 435 persons aboard the Arabic were taken off by another steamer. The Arabic sailed from Liverpool yesterday afternoon. She was following the usual path for Transatlantic liners, and was about 50 or 60 miles west of the spot where the Lusitania was torpedoed off Old Kinsale Head on May 7, when she was attacked by a German submarine. Because of that fact, hope is expressed here that other steamers traversing the same route could not have been far away when the Arabic's wireless called for help. Thoughts of the American colony here and of the Government's official, at once turned to the possible bearing of the torpedoing of the Arabic on German-American relations. The Arabic flew the British flag. Liverpool despatches thus far have not stated whether she carried any American passengers, and have given no hint as to whether Captain Finch attempted to escape from the submersible when attacked. In the absence of news on either of these circumstances, it was impossible to determine whether the

$2,300 SO FAR RAISED FOR THE 59TH REGT. FUND

County Council Gave $400 and Peterborough Cheese Board $25—Capt. Park and Lieut. Rackham Return to Barriefield

EXPECT TO GET $5,000

Capt. Maurice Park and Lieut. Rackham left for Barriefield this morning, after a stay of two weeks in the city, in the interests of the 59th Battalion regimental fund. Lieut. Rackham expects to return on Saturday and remain about a week to continue the canvas. The fund is growing $2,300 having already been subscribed. By the time the rest of the city is covered, and with promises remained, it is expected the required $5,000 will be realized.

Lieut Rackham attended a meeting of the Council of the Township of Harvey, on Saturday afternoon. The Peterborough County Council gave $400 to the fund. The Peterborough Cheese Board donated $25, with prospects of doing more after the day's make of cheese, voted on yesterday, is disposed of.

The officers are very much pleased with the hearty response of the citizens, especially considering all the calls that have been made on them from time to time. The merchants of different lines, are giving collectively.

All subscriptions will be acknowledged from Barriefield, but necessarily there will be some delay.

SERBIA WILL MAKE REPLY THIS WEEK

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Serbia probably will make her reply this week to the suggestion of the Entente Ministers that she cede Macedonia to Bulgaria.

A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Nish, Serbia, says:

"The outcome of the deliberations of the Serbian Parliament, which is expected to hold secret sittings on Thursday and Friday, is awaited with the utmost interest, and indeed, anxiety in the Balkan States. On Tuesday the proposals of the Entente powers were the object of an exhaustive examination by the Cabinet. Premier Pachitch, who has been to Kraguyevatz, where he conferred with the Prince Regent and General Putnik, has returned to Nish.

"Opinions seem divided at present regarding the course Serbia should pursue, although the gravity of the situation is fully realized.

"Development of the crisis in Greece is being followed with the deepest concern here in view of its effect on the general situation in the Balkans."

MORE MEN FOR BATTERY

Ten Local Recruits From the 24th Battery Left This Morning to Join the New Artillery Unit at Barriefield Camp

MORE MEN ARE WAITING

Ten more Peterborough young men left to-day on the first stage of the journey to the European firing line, making a total of seventy-five who have left the city since the recruiting campaign began two weeks ago, while nearly a hundred other infantry and artillery recruits are ready for the next order to move. To-day's squad consisted of the second draft from the 24th Field Battery to the new overseas battery at Kingston.

All the men were well known local boys and seven of the draft were born in Canada, a higher percentage than most quotas from here. Scotland claimed one of the others and England the other two.

The squad were lined up at the armouries at 7.30 o'clock by Lieut Beresford Hamilton, of the 24th Battery. Ald. Green and Ald. Dobbin were present on behalf of the city, in the absence of Mayor Butler, who is in Ottawa on business; and the former expressed the appreciation of the city at the spirit shown by the young men.

The march to the G.T.R. station was headed by a composite band from the 59th Overseas Band and the 57th Regimental Band, while the artillery were escorted by a squad from the infantry recruits in charge of Sergt. Wm Lyburn.

There was a large gathering of friends at the station, and the squad was given a hearty send-off. As the train pulled out the band played "The Girl I left Behind Me," and the infantry recruits lead in cheers for their comrades.

This morning's squad consisted of the following:

John O'Dette, 39 Crescent street, born in Canada.
Joseph Hagerman, 52 Victoria Ave., born in Canada.
Fred J. Doig, McGill street, born in Canada.
Alfred G. Hagerman, 161 Hunter street, born in Canada.
Alfred Bishop, corner of Park and Edison Ave., born in England.
Ormond R. Girven, 523 Rogers street, born in Canada.
Harry Carr, 333 Reid street, born in Canada.
George Blanchard, 546 Waterford street, born in Canada.
Angus Smith, 151 Park street, born in Scotland.
Herbert Turner, 338 Water street, born in England.

Capt. W. C. Ackerman will continue recruiting for the artillery until further notice. An especially good class of men have been offering themselves for the artillery, and the Sportsmen's Battery, as the 33rd is known, will be composed for the most part of keen young athletes.

BANK CLEARINGS

The clearings for the week ending August 19th, totalled $385,202, an increase over the previous week of $79,258. The same week last month the clearings were $331,750 and the same week last year they were $324,455.

HOUSTON, Texas, Aug. 19. With 14 known victims of storm in Galveston, reports from other stricken cities show that 115 lost their lives directly as a result of the storm which subsided late last night. Property damage in Galveston $16,000,000.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 19. A great hurricane and rain cost the entire south $60,000,000, according to estimates to-day based on reports from various sections of devastated area. Loss in damage to buildings is roughly estimated at $10,000,000, cotton and other crops $20,000,000, oil fields $2,000,000.

THE MONEY WAS PAID INTO COURT

The case of Kelly v. Edmonson, in which the former sought to recover the sum of $12.75 as wages alleged to be due for service rendered, was settled in the County Police Court by the payment of the money into court.

INFANTRY RECRUITS WILL MARCH TO CHEMONG TO-MORROW

Overseas Men Will Hike to the Summer Resort Accompanied by the Band Who Will Give a Concert in the Park.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The local infantry recruits will route march to Chemong Park to-morrow, headed by the Overseas Band. They will leave the Armouries at 7.30 o'clock sharp and lunch will be carried, the detachment returning to the city in the afternoon. At Chemong Park the band will play a number of selections, and any donations from the tourists and residents of the park to the regimental fund of the 59th Battalion, will be gratefully received.

Dick O'Brien, son of Mr. Michael O'Brien, Gilmour street, Provincial Separate School Inspector, left this morning for Barriefield Camp, where he will be attached to the Canadian Army Service Corps. This is the third son to join the colours, James being with the 35th Battalion, and Will in England with the first draft from the 36th Battery.

The 33rd Battery to which the Peterborough artillery recruits will be attached, is already known in Kingston as the Sportsmen's Battery. A dozen local ball players will soon be in the ranks. The Kingston Standard says:

Lieut. Huycke and Lieut. Gill, of the 33rd Battery, have arrived in camp and assumed duty with their battery. Lieut Huycke is a brother of the assistant adjutant of the 59th Battalion, and is a crack baseball player. The men of the 33rd Battery are moving for a baseball team, and although they have only been in camp a matter of days, they are getting ready to give anything else in camp a big tussle for baseball honours. In fact they feel that the city will have to look well after its laurels unless the city teams want their laurels stolen by the baseball enthusiasts of the 33rd Battery, C.F.A.

Sergt. Fred Shurrey of the 8th C.M.R. was in town to-day to take back to Barriefield two local deserters from the 8th C.M.R. who returned to town recently.

The Chessmen of the City Ball League are the latest to catch the khaki fever. Imbedder Jack O'Dette left with the battery draft for Barriefield this morning and Shortstop Anderson of the same club has also enlisted with the 24th Battery for overseas service. So far eleven city league players are with the colours, as is the League Secretary, Harry Carr, who left this morning, while two other have sailed for the Old Country to work on munitions.

The 57th Regiment overseas representation in the overseas forces is not confined to the infantry. Some forty former members of the 57th are with the 8th C.M.R. Two former 57th men left with the battery draft this morning.

Angus Smith, of the local staff of the Bank of Montreal was among the artillery recruits who left this morning.

Seven of the ten battery recruits who left this morning were native born Canadians and the other who will leave on the next draft were nearly all born in Canada.

The battery to which the local recruits are going will be able to put on the field a ball team that will keep the other units at Barriefield guessing. With Lieut. Huycke of the Tigers as a pitcher and Alf Hagerman and Alex Butcher of the East Citys and Jack O'Dette and Anderson of the Classics as an infield, the battery will have the nucleus of a crack team. The chances are that Ormond Savanah and Harold King, two of the Hustlers who are at present taking a non-commissioned officers course may be attached to the same battery giving them two more good players.

Another Peterborough boy who is going in not for the Empire, is to receive to-day in the person of Lieut. W. Armstrong of the 65th Battalion overseas battalion, son of Mr. W. R. G. Armstrong, formerly of Peterborough, and now Provincial Organizer for Saskatoon of the Orange Order. Lieut. Armstrong is here on his way to Ottawa, where he will attend the Royal school of Musketry.

Alf Hagerman who left this morning for Barriefield with the 24th, 25th

Over 1,300 Canadians Are Prisoners of War

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 19.—A return received here to-day gives the total number of Canadian prisoners of war in all parts of Germany up to last week as 1,365.

Six hundred and thirty-six of these are at Giessen, 96 at Hanover, 157 at Munster, 53 at Soppelazer, 57 at Meschede, 48 at Paderborn, 46 at Ohrdruf and 14 at Oberhausen. The remainder are distributed among Belgium and North-west Germany.

The appointments of Capt. Houston (with Winnipeg Light Infantry) and Capt. J. H. Heath, 3rd Victoria Rifles, as assistants to the officers in charge of records are officially confirmed. Capt. Dodson, 22nd battalion becomes temporary major, and Lieut. Chasse temporary captain.

News From the Barriefield Camp

KINGSTON, August 18. Bandmaster Peryer of Peterborough is ready to begin the work of organizing and training the 59th band. The new bandmaster will come to the camp with a reputation for good things in band matters. He took the famous silver band of the Peterborough Salvation Army to England, after the band of the territorial headquarters had been drowned in the Empress of Ireland disaster, and the band elicited much praise from the English press and people for the quality of its work. This means that the 59th have sought the best they could find for the new band.

Major Sears has his tents erected and the lines of the 33rd battery laid out east of the 8th C.M.R. It is one of the most delightful spots in the camp. Orderly tent and mess tent for the men are up and in operation, and in a few days the men will be equipped with uniforms and kit. They are being drilled every day and are getting well in shape.

THE DANGER AND THE REMEDY.

The Chicago Tribune, is mistaken in asserting that "Canada, physically at least, is in no danger from the Teuton." Not only Canada, but the United States is in danger, will be in danger, if Germany wins. Germany is fighting for world domination: fighting with the ferocious and deadly energy of a cause whose merit appeals to the sympathy of no country.

Not only is Germany fighting her declared opponents, but she is actually fighting the United States. The latter country is striving as a government to live up to a consistent neutrality—it is not the government's fault that the people won't — can't — remain neutral, at least, in sympathy, when the liberty their fathers fought for a hundred years ago and, won, is in danger. Germany has by plots, intrigues, bribery, spying and lying, sought to neutralize the efforts of the Government of the United States to steer the straight course and embroil her in the struggle. Germany has stirred up trouble between Mexico and the United States, and in every possible way, moral—and immoral—and material, has thrust her interfering hand in the domestic affairs of the republic to the south of us.

If Germany can do that much, when she has so much on her hands, when her navy is reduced, to idle impulsance, and she is girt on every side with foes, what will she not do, if she is allowed to win in this colossal fight?

Will she respect any rights of Canada? Will she, if she conquers, leave Canada the free institutions, the self-government, and the liberties, we exercise and enjoy to-day? Will she, if she wins the power which she will win, as sure as sunrise, if she is permitted to do so, respect the interests of the United States? Will she, whose power if she succeeds, will be based on tyranny and despotism, allow the greatest democracy in the world, to keep the power to thwart her plans?

No; there is no doubt of the fact that if Germany conquers we shall be counted among the conquered and among the spoils of victory. Nor is there any doubt of the danger, which has never been greater than now. Germany seems to be marching from triumph to triumph in the east. Her submarine campaign is livening. Her Zeppelin raids are reviving. All along the line there is evidence of the certainty that, unless the strongest defence is put up, unless every available ounce of strength is put into play, Germany will win.

In this case there is a louder call than ever for the Dominions to come to the rescue of the Empire, the rescue of themselves, and of the interests of country and home, from the impending menace.

This is a distinct call to the enlistment of every man fit to shoulder and fire a gun. The man who can fight, and refuses to actively enter upon the defence of his country, his home, his liberties, in the interests of humanity, is not a man — and what greater reproach, what greater burden can a man carry through life than the brand of cowardice?

There is no ground for pessimism, if patriotism plays its part. We must have more recruits; and if the fighting men decide to fight, the whole rest of the population will stand behind them as thousands are to-day standing before them and showing the way—the women who work, and the men who pay, to promote interests, they cannot promote by physical service under arms.

PAVING PROBLEMS.

Peterborough is doing considerable street paving, and its construction presents many problems for solution. First is the problem of paying for it. That is a simple matter that the city authorities can be expected to look after, though it is a rather serious problem for the ratepayers affected.

SIR WILFRID'S STAND.

"I affirm it with all my power, that it is the duty of Canada to give to Great Britain in this war all the assistance that is in the power of Canada. My confidence in the present Government at Ottawa does not ooze from the soles of my boots, but at the outbreak of the war I considered it my duty to support it in its war policy. I have supported it in that policy ever since and I will support it again. The reason is that this war is a contest between German institutions and British institutions. British institutions mean freedom. German institutions mean despotism. That is why we as Canadians have such a vital interest in this war."— Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Sherbrooke.

There are other problems arising from existing conditions, arising in turn from neglect of providing conditions favourable to simplifying the work of paving—to a lack of foresight.

On Hunter street there is some and not a little difficulty in getting proper levels, to meet levels of sidewalks. This is due to a lack of foresight, to lack of plans. Years ago The Examiner advocated the preparation of a grade plan for the city: This would have cost, perhaps, $200; but it would have saved thousands in money, and much worry and annoyance. From lack of a grade plan buildings were placed at all sorts of levels with the result that the levels were "out of joint" with the sidewalks laid later. And these were laid without any reference to a general plan or scheme, merely adapted to local configuration of streets.

The result is that we have the most varied and astonishing collection of contradictory levels and sidewalk lines imaginable.

This is what is giving the trouble in getting at the proper level for the pavement on Hunter and possibly other streets. It is evident that the right thing can not be done with the pavement levels—they will have to be "humoured" to correspond with sidewalk levels, and the result may be unsatisfactory.

This is the result of not having a grade plan to work to. The result is not only contradictory levels, but great additional cost for changes; some levels are so outrageously "out" that numerous and costly changes and rebuilding have had to be made and done. It is not too late to take the lesson to heart.

Payment for pavements is both the easy and the difficult problem. It is easy on the city's part; it has only to present its bill and enforce payment. It is not so easy, however, for the ratepayer to find the means for his frontage tax bill.

The ratepayer can be helped in this matter by making his share of payment, as well as the general rate of payment, smaller.

Street surfaces are made for use for traffic purposes only; and the width of roadway of a street need be no greater than to accommodate the normal traffic.

Our street surfaces are generally far too wide. A middle line of street surface used and necessary, as shown by wheel marks, on residence streets, is only about from 20 to 25 feet. All the rest of the surface is waste — weed-grown mud.

In paving new streets, the amount the ratepayer is to pay is gauged by the width of driving surface covered with pavement. When a ratepayer has to pay for a number of years his share of the cost of a pavement, costing, everything considered, from $2.50 to $3.00 per square yard, it is quite obvious that the smaller the surface, the fewer the number of square yards, the less will have to be paid.

It is, therefore, evident that it is in the ratepayers' interest to make the width of pavement as small as possible, consistent with traffic requirements. There is no call to pay for any considerable amount of street surface that is not absolutely needed.

There are many other considerations, than the money matter, that influence the reduction of street width between curbs. The narrower the driving surface, the more surface is added to the lawns of citizens, and the possibilities of having beautiful streets is largely increased.

With narrowed street surfaces the ratepayers is benefitted in pocket and premises; and the public have as much roadway as they can use or need to use. The public, the general ratepayers, pay less, and the individual ratepayer less, and the paved streets with narrowed driveways are just as satisfactory in the matter of use — which is solely what they are laid for.

A VIVID PICTURE OF THE DIFFICULTIES GALLANT GENERAL BOTHA HAD TO FIGHT WITH

A vivid picture of the difficulties Gen. Botha and his expeditionary force had to face in the conquest of German southwest Africa is supplied in a letter from Sergt. Tozer of the South African Mounted Rifles, sent to a friend in London.

"When we marched out of Swakopmund in the spring," says the sergeant in a breezy fashion, "each man was served with nine biscuits and enough coffee for two days, and he was told it might be weeks before he'd get any more. And it was so. It was march, march, day and night. Now and then we raised a bag of mealie meal, and there were plenty of sheep and oxen which we had no difficulty in shooting. But as there was no salt and no vegetables, and very soon no coffee, a diet of mutton and beef wasn't so attractive as it sounds, for our blood got out of order, and the least scratch quickly developed into a big sore.

"It was impossible to avoid being cut whilst riding through the bush. In the daytime it was bad enough, but at night it was twenty times worse. Our hands and faces were awful, and with little or no water—none to wash with—you can imagine what it was like. I remember when we entered Windhuk my hands were so bad I couldn't hold anything. The thirst was terrible, and the heat sometimes rose to 120 Fah. in the shade.

Captured a German Convoy.

We captured Nonidas Husah (a big fight with equal losses on both sides), Riet Salem Esaobis, and Otyembinque, where after a brief engagement we had a glorious night's rest. In Windhuk we rested a day and a half and then were ordered out to capture a German convoy on its way to Seus. This we accomplished. By that time horses and men were practically finished. He had to recoup, the horses and mules to be shod, and the men to repair clothing and equipment. Our shirts and tunics were rags.

"After a week's rest out of Windhuk we again marcher, and in four days we were in Okasise. Each of our marches was so timed that we could reach a water-hole and it meant capturing each place or returning to the last. The whole undertaking was fraught with the gravest danger. Just imagine penetrating into the interior of an enemy country without transport or seasoned food, knowing full well the opposition we should encounter, mines and poisoned wells, and only a force of 5,000 men with a battery of four field guns. As you know, Gen. Botha himself was in command, and a more daring and wonderful leader does not exist.

Blinded and Choked.

"When I saw what the burghers were capable of doing (and our force was composed entirely of burgher commandoes) then it was that I could realize what the British had to contend with during the Boer war. They are a superb lot of fighting men, and I would go anywhere with them. They rode silently through each night, each commando taking it in turn to form our escort; night after night we would follow the spoor of the advance guards and scouts (a most difficult matter on a dark night over broken country) only just a big, long mountain range on our left to guide us. Our greatest trouble was the wretched dust — we were blinded and choked with it.

The Veil That Failed.

"The good people of South Africa instituted a veil fund, and provided every soldier with a veil; but those veils were a rank failure. The dust accumulated on them to such an extent that the effects of our breath and perspiration soon converted them into a veil of hard earth and we felt as if we would suffocate, so those poor old veils were discarded. A lot of men tried goggles, but these had the effect of straining one's eyes, and we found it far better to do without. At the latter stage of our march we suffered from intense cold at night and extreme heat during the day.

At dusk the order would be passed along the column, "No smoking, no lights"—a real hardship to men of the stamp that we were with—but no matter what we had to put up with, all bore it cheerfully. The spirit of every man was in his work, and I never want to travel in different company. We were saddle-sore and very weary, but not a word of complaint could be heard. It was really marvellous.

Their Love for Our Artillery.

The burghers will go anywhere with a battery of artillery, and we were immensely popular with them. At night, when it was necessary for us to pass a commando, they would shout out, "Pas sop voor cannons"—a distinct accent on the "nons." The canteen would be passed along and they would dash into the bush on each side of us. I can recall our action at Barends Mine vividly. We had taken up our third and last position in the afternoon, when our own burghers swooped down from the hills and swarmed all in a cluster behind each gun quite regardless of the danger to us and to themselves, for had a German shell burst over one of our guns there would have been a big loss of life.

Germans' Fine Buildings.

I was astonished to see such fine buildings in the towns we occupied. Even the water arrangements were most effective. Pipes and mains were laid on to connect every house. The inhabitants looked well fed and displayed no signs of toil; they evidently relied on the Kaffirs and Hereros to work for them. The whole of G. S. W. A. (now, of course, B. S. W. A.) is in telephonic communication.

My battery is commanded by Capt. J. F. Wolmarans, late of the Transvaal Artillery. He served with the Boers in the last war—a fine, big, splendid, typical farmer. Three brothers are with us, while two joined the rebels, one of whom was shot dead and the other captured."

WHY ATTACK SIR WILFRID?

Mr. J. H. Burnham, who was recently re-nominated in West Peterborough for the House of Commons, expresses much concern, in his newspaper, the Peterborough Review, about recruiting in the Province of Quebec, where, by the way, it is much more active than in Peterborough. But he goes further, in his issue of Monday, to rebuke Sir Wilfrid Laurier for not taking part in recruiting meetings "sooner than he has."

Mr. Burnham, from his place behind Sir Robert Borden in Parliament, heard Sir Wilfrid Laurier make one of the finest recruiting speeches on August 19 last, and on September 28 the Liberal leader made his fourth appearance on the public platform in that month urging Canadians to come forward in support of the Mother Country in this great struggle. Since then Sir Wilfrid has been speaking on every possible occasion, nor ever once begging relief on account of his advanced years.

How often has Mr. Burnham organized and addressed recruiting meetings? Montreal Herald Telegraph

If the Herald-Telegraph wishes an answer to its closing question, it might address itself to the Secretary of the General Committee of the Peterborough Speakers' Patriotic League. It would then be officially informed of the work done, the aid given by Mr. Burnham in helping the committee in its work of stimulating recruiting.

In 1913 the exports of American agricultural implements amounted to $40,000,000, as compared with $10,000,000 in the year ending June 30th, 1915.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

It is the circulation of The Examiner that gets it so many "Want" and "For Sale" advertisements—a circulation that gives the advertiser every confidence of producing quick results.

When you write a "Want", tell all the important facts. If you are advertising for help, tell just what is to be expected of the applicants. As a matter of fairness, those who seek employment should know all the principal facts regarding a position.

"For Sale" advertising in The Examiner will show the facility with which you can turn "used things" that are no longer needed, into money quickly.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The friends of Mr. J. T. Thompson, our former Physical Director, will be pleased to know that he is to be in Peterborough Saturday and Sunday next. Young men who would like to see Mr. Thompson, should call at the Association building Saturday evening.

We were pleased to receive a card from Bugler A. C. Sharp, who is now in England, and he stated that the 30th had a very pleasant voyage in crossing, and that he is in the best of health.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held Tuesday evening the resignation of Mr. G. A. Carson, as Physical Director of the Association, was received with regret. Mr. Carson leaves for Hamilton on September 1st, where he has a large field of opportunities before him.

Another meeting of the Directors will be held Friday evening, at eight o'clock, at which time it is expected that a successor to Mr. Carson will be appointed.

Tenders are now being asked for the alterations to our building. Tenders to be in by August 8th. We will be pleased if a number of our local contractors will figure on the work.

The General Secretary recently attended a conference of secretaries at Lake Couchiching at which time the policy of the Canadian Associations for the coming year was considered. It was agreed that the Empire's call to young men overshadows every other interest at the present, and that the main work of the association for 1915 should be to prepare young men to respond to this call. The local Association expects to set up a gymnasium programme to help overcome individual physical defects that might prevent young men from being accepted as recruits. Other departments of the Association will endeavour to fit our young men to meet the great crisis of their lives.

Quite a number of the subscriptions made during the recent campaign are now due and may be paid at the Association Office. Should subscribers desire to have an Association representative call to receive the subscription kindly 'phone the Association office. The need of funds at the present time is pressing, so we trust that our financial supporters will supply us with cash immediately.

The next contest will be between the Elliot and the Sturgeon rinks.

The Value of A Man's Soul

At the big Hunter Street Tabernacle, last night, Evangelist Sharpe gave a very convincing discourse on the "Value of Man's Soul," choosing his text from Mar. 8:36 "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

He said there were two words which stood out very prominently in the text, and those were the words Soul and World. The soul of man is great because of the great price which the Lord Jesus Christ paid to redeem it. We are told that we are not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ. If God could have redeemed the soul of man with gold how easily He could have secured that in any amount. He could have called into existence the gold required just as He created the world in the beginning."

Man's soul is great because of its capacity. Mr. Sharpe referred to the incident where Christ cast 2,000 devils out of one man. He said the swine went and drowned themselves rather than have the devil in them. Those swine, said the preacher, had more sense than lots of men who are willing to go about with the devil in them, dragging them downward. A greater reason given for the value of man's soul was because of its capacity to hold the Spirit of the living God.

The evangelist made a striking comparison when he said that if a soul possessed the whole world they could hire men like Carnegie as their boot black and men like Rockefeller to dig in their garden. They would be as popcorn men to you. But what if you had possession of the whole world for a hundred years and then died without Christ. Your soul would be lost. Although God has told you that it would profit you nothing if you should gain the whole world, yet men and women in Peterborough are bartering off their souls to the devil for a paltry sum. It would be a mad bargain to sell your soul for the world, for the world does not last. How long is the thing which you have in the place of Christ going to last. The Christian gets the best out of this life and also out of the life to come. I never knew what joy and happiness were until I knelt and said "God be merciful to me a sinner." To lose your soul is to miss the best in this life and also in the life to come.

The services tonight will begin at 8 o'clock.

Not Very Pleasant.

Patrick's face was so homely that it had to be described as an "offence to the landscape," and he was as poor as he was homely. One day a neighbour met him and said: "And how are ye, Pat?" "Mighty bad," answered Pat. "It's starvation that's staring me in the face." "Is that so?" said the sympathetic inquirer. "Sure, and it can't be very pleasant for aither of ye."

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

United Cigar Stores sales in July were $2,613,758, compared with $2,432,228 in July 1914, an increase of about 8 per cent.

Report of Henry R. Follett, ancillary receiver of the Lozier Motor Co., was allowed in the Federal District Court and he was discharged from further service.

Bank of England bought $1,250,000 in foreign coin, and sold $9,000,000 in gold, presumably for America.

Westinghouse Air Brake Company plants at Pittsburgh, it is reported, are operating on a seven-day schedule owing to the pressure of war orders.

French Government is inquiring for 200,000 tons of bars and billets, and Italy for 18,000 tons of shrapnel bars.

Schenectady, Ill Co. has applied to the Upstate Public Service Commission for permission to issue $2,447,000 capital stock and the Mohawk Gas Co. for $780,000 capital stock.

Renfrew Manufacturing Co. resumed dividend payments on the common stock discontinued in July, 1914, by declaring a quarterly dividend of 1 per cent. on common. The previous rate was 1 1-4 per cent. quarterly.

Detroit United Railway Co. has ordered seventy-five double truck cars; fifty will be of steel.

In despatches from Pittsburg it was said that E. A. Borie, at one time vice-president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was "slated" for the presidency of the new Driggs-Seabury corporation.

As the outcome of what students of the market declared to be "professional acceleration" of the trading in the new Driggs-Seabury stock on the curb yesterday, scenes that were wild even for that well known market were presented. It was not known that the representatives of any New York Stock Exchange houses had anything to do with them. The police committee, it is assumed, would attend to that.

Some little difficulty is being experienced here again in connection with the issue of Pennsylvania Railroad bonds listed on the French Bourse, and payable in francs. In some banks it is said that such bonds are being returned to the company for other securities available in this country. Many Pennsylvania bonds were in the collateral sent here by French bankers to establish a credit for France.

J. H. Ladew, it is reported, has sold his steam yacht Columbia to the Canadian government. Randal Morgan of Philadelphia, also well known in the financial world, has sold his yacht, Waterus, to the same purchaser.

The Republic Iron and Steel Company resumed dividend payments recently. A quarterly dividend of 1 3-4 per cent., and an extra of ¼ of one per cent. were declared on the preferred stock.

NEW YORK PRESS COMMENTS

Times.—The short interest seems to be increasing, but the market is still carried forward by its own momentum.

Sun.—Of the absolute right of the Allies to declare cotton contraband, there can be no question.

Journal of Commerce.—There has been some increase in the volume of foreign selling of American securities.

World.—The premium which B R T. stock has been commanding in the loan crowd indicated that a heavy short interest exists.

Wall Street Journal.—Prominent banking interests express confidence of an ultimate much higher stock level, although they are indisposed to talk of the immediate course of prices.

Financial America.—Trading continues active, with the stock market giving signs of a broadening tendency.

THE KAISER'S FORTUNE

The private fortune of the Kaiser is said to have diminished $20,000,000 since the war began. When the war contribution was levied in Germany a few years ago, the kaiser was placed first as having the greatest income, $5,625,000, but third as regards the amount of his fortune, ranking after Mme. Bertha Krupp von Bohlen, with $50,000,000, and an income of $3,200,000, and Prince Henckel von Donnersmarck, $50,000,000, and an income of $2,000,000. The kaiser's visible assets were reckoned as real estate, crown forests, etc., $17,500,000, building property, $10,000,000, property in Berlin, $4,500,000, totalling $32,000,000. In addition he possesses a crown treasure of $3,750,000, and an unknown sum from investments made since he came to the throne, including heavy holdings in the Hamburg-American line, the Reichsbank and Krupp's.

STEEL OUTLOOK IN U. S.

A big source of satisfaction in business circles is the steady widening of activity in the great steel industry, says Henry Clews, in his Weekly Review. While much of this is due to war contracts, many of which promise to be exceedingly profitable, the latter do not now form so large a share of the total new orders as is sometimes supposed.

There has been a steady and improving home demand at rising prices for nearly all descriptions of fabricated steel, especially for constructive purposes, and the railways have not yet begun to place orders with their customary freedom.

When they do, as in all probability they soon must, the steel industry will become even more active and the flood tide of prosperity in this great industry will be at its height.

Getting Out of the Rut.

The merchant who conducts his business according to the method of the last century is not giving his customers the service they are entitled to. The spirit of the new century is to do more than to merely turn goods over at a profit. It is to really earn that profit by giving real service, accommodation and reliable advice. The modern merchant must know his goods thoroughly and what is best adapted to every household requirement.

That class of merchant invariably advertises. That is the one sure test of his being abreast of the times.

MRS. GEO. A. COX DIES SUDDENLY IN TORONTO

Widow of Late Senator Succumbs After Returning From Vacation

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 19. Mrs. George A. Cox, widow of the late Senator George A. Cox, and eldest daughter of Mr. Walter Sterling, auditor for the City of Toronto, died suddenly last night in her residence, 467 Sherbourne street. She had not been ailing, and had only recently returned in good spirits from a holiday spent in the Muskoka district. She appeared to be in good health when she retired to rest on Tuesday night. Evidently she was taken ill during the night for she was found in an unconscious condition in her bed yesterday morning. She never regained consciousness, and passed away at about 10.30 o'clock last night. It was said an acute attack of kidney trouble was the cause of her death.

Mrs. Cox, whose maiden name was Miss Amy Gertrude Sterling, was the second wife of the late Senator Cox, to whom she was married in April, 1899. Senator Cox died on January 16, 1914. Mrs. Cox was a lady of charming personality and was in the neighbourhood of 40 years. She was, as has been said, the eldest daughter of Mr. Walter Sterling. Her two sisters, who survive her, are Mrs. W. M. Cockburn, of Winnipeg, and Miss Sterling at home. Mrs. Cox was a prominent and active member of Sherbourne street Methodist church. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been completed.

Invalid; Bedridden Half a Century Puzzles Experts By Her Psychic Powers

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—"I had the curious sensation of seeing my body a still, inanimate thing, lying on the bed I had just left, while I, the real person, who inhabited that bodily frame, hovered above, suspended as it were in space, in a different plane of existence."

This is the weirdest sentence in the remarkable story, told for the first time to the New York American, by Mollie Fancher, the invalid, who has been bedridden for the last fifty years. It is a story of astonishing psychic powers vouchsafed to a bright mind, imprisoned in a crippled body, that puzzled world-renowned scientists for [illegible]

Marvelous psychic powers came to me during the last twenty-five years," she said yesterday, in a low but clear and vibrant voice that betrayed the wonder she herself felt. It was the occasion of her sixty-sixth birthday, which she celebrated by giving out the first interview she has granted in the tedious years of her affliction.

State of Detachment.

"During these twenty-five years," she continued, "I frequently lapsed into a state of detachment that lasted for long periods.

"While in this state my soul seemed to leave my body. I seemed to hover over the apparently lifeless flesh with all the sense of sight and feeling still in my possession. I could feel the earth around me, vibrating with the vigour of life, yet I realized I was not a part of it.

"For a few brief seconds each time I viewed, without feeling, my body as it lay beneath me, and then I started on one of the little journeys that showed me the joys and griefs of those I loved. I can remember distinctly each journey that I took with my friends, who were unaware of the proximity of my soul to them.

"I knew what each of my loved ones was doing, while I was on my astral travels, though I was seemingly unconscious to those watching around my body, and my friends were separated from me by thousands of miles of distance.

"When I returned from each of these strange spirit journeys my doctor would tell me how rigid and cold my body had been. I could relate things about my friends that never had been told me.

"Some, of course, were just the trivial things of life. But there were also things of a more intimate nature that always later developed to be uncannily true."

For the last quarter of a century Mollie Fancher has shown a wonderful and accurate knowledge of the world she has never seen from her room at No. 160 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn.

Many demonstrations of her mysterious powers have been made before noted men of science, among whom Dr. S. Fleet Speir, Judge A. H. Daly and Professor Charles E. West figure prominently. These men have repeatedly admitted that the exhibitions she made of mind reading and ability to forecast have baffled their understanding.

It was just fifty years ago that Mollie Fancher, then a girl of sixteen, fell from a horse and seriously injured herself. Before she had quite recovered from this accident she slipped from the step of a street car, catching her crinoline in the doorway and fell to the ground, a cripple for the rest of her life.

Though her psychic powers seem to have passed as mysteriously as they came, Molly to-day is a natural and mentally active woman.

Grip on Modern Conditions.

A few of her views on general topics clearly show that, despite her age and crippled condition, she has a strong grip upon modern conditions.

"I think President Wilson does not want another term, but he will have to take it," she declared.

"The women of to-day do not dress, they undress. I hate to think of the mincing little steps their narrow skirts make necessary. But even so, I guess they are stronger than in the days of tight lacing and hoop skirts. The days of the crinoline—those were days of Fashion's freaks, just as white fur in Summer typifies the ultra freak styles of the present day.

"I am not a suffragist. Let the men vote. I agree with the woman who thought if there was one thing a man could do in this world without a woman's help for goodness sake let him do it. Let the women stay at home with their babies. If the women ever do get the vote it's going to bore them to death."

DELIGHTFUL WATER TRIP TO HEALEY FALLS

The "Stoney Lake's" New Trip

"All aboard for Healy Falls!" was the slogan yesterday morning. "All aboard!" and as the final whistle tooted at 7.30 a.m., precisely, the staunch little steamer "Stoney Lake," was cast off from its moorings at the Government wharf on George street, to start away for a trip to Healy Falls and back, a distance of somewhere around one hundred and twenty-five miles.

This was the second trip, the first inaugurating run having been made three weeks ago, or thereabouts, and so well had it "taken on" that the trip was made again yesterday, and this outing bids fair to be one of—it not the—most popular water excursions on the neighbourhood. The boat was well filled, which in itself was proof positive that this new departure was warmly welcomed.

The morning was bright but there was a tang of fall weather in the air, for the previous night had been the coldest this season, the thermometer registering as low as 44 degrees, or only twelve degrees above the frost line. I have these figures on the authority of no less a man than Mr. Walter Peters, the Government's local meteorological record keeper, who was aboard the steamer. It may be that owing to his intimate connection with the Clerk of the Weather, we enjoyed such a long spell of brilliant sunshine yesterday.

The start was made at 7.30 a.m., the Peterborough Lock being negotiated at 7.50—the East City wharf having been visited in the meantime. The street railway wharf was reached at 8.05. The T.A.S. Park was passed at 8.30; Hales' Bridge at 9.05; Rose's Bridge, 9.30; Jubilee Point, 10.15; the Narrows, 11.20, arriving at Hastings at 12.15 p.m., where a stop was made until 12.30. Trent Bridge, where a regatta was being held, was reached at 1.15. Here a short stay was made, sufficiently long to disembark about one half of the passengers, and the steamer proceeded down the river Trent to Healy Falls, arriving there at 2.15.

The run down Rice Lake was very pretty; there are so many islands which lend enchantment to the scene. After entering the lake there is Tick Island, at the end of the old railway fill, off Harwood. Then are passed among others, Potash Island, Long Point, Sugar Island, White's Island, Grape Island, Hickory Island, Ame's Island, Margaret Island, together with several others of smaller extent.

Meanwhile everybody had been mightily busy at knife and fork work. Hampers of various dimensions, varying greatly in the nature of their contents were in great requisition; while for those who had not bothered themselves with impediments of this sort, an excellent dinner was served in the saloon. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly. As usual Captain Scollard, assisted by an able staff of officers, was looking after the comfort of his numerous passengers. The refreshment booth, under the able management of the Dawson brothers, was in continuous demand, and ice-creams were dispensed such as Hebe would have served up to the gods. Had ice-cream freezers been then in vogue.

An hour was pleasantly passed at Healy Falls. A huge engineering work has been carried out here. A large concrete dam with sluices, and an extensive range of retaining walls, also in concrete, have been built, the idea being to utilize the water-power given off at these falls. A very powerful generating station has its locale here, which is well worth seeing by anybody who is interested in the production of electricity. The Falls, or cascades, are very picturesque, the fall apparently being somewhere about eighty feet. Constables were stationed on the works, on guard; no photographs were allowed to be taken; otherwise there were no restrictions to the pleasure seeker.

At 3.15 the start for the homeward journey was made, and all proceeded in the most satisfactory and comfortable manner. At Trent Bridge, was picked up the contingent disembarked on the outward journey; at 5.15 Hastings was reached, where those who had landed on the outward journey were re-embarked. Naturally the outward trip being with the current was somewhat shorter than the return voyage which was against the wind and stream. The time on the outward trip was 6 3-4 hours, while the return occupied 7 1-2 hours, the George street wharf being reached at 10.45 p.m.

Altogether, it was a delightful day's outing, and if any of my readers like a good long day's water trip, let them take my tip and take in this trip before it gets too late in the season. I do not think they will be likely to regret it.—F. R.

RUSSIAN FRONT ON BALTIC IS ASSAILED BY LAND AND SEA

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD, Aug. 19. — On the Baltic front the new German forces have not been able to overcome the Russian pressure and take the offensive. Operations in this region are now of the foremost importance, seeing that they are being conducted simultaneously on land and sea. From the left bank of the upper Narrew the Germans are stubbornly trying to get at the railway network towards Bielsk and Bielston, and so isolate Brest-Litovsk from the metropolis. Vast numbers of Germans are on this front, whereas Mackensen's eleventh army has now been transferred to the right bank of the Bug with the object of drawing the Russians there and so make it easier for the Galiwicza and Holtze armies to penetrate the Russian line at Bielsk and Bielestock. This move, however, is certain to meet with the most stubborn resistance.

On the occasion of the storming of Kovno Emperor William sent telegrams of congratulations to Field Marshal von Hindenburg and Generals von Eichhorn and Litzmann. That to von Hindenburg said:

"With Kovno the first and strongest bulwark of the inner line of the Russian defences has fallen into German hands. For this brilliant feat of arms the Fatherland is indebted, as well as for the incomparable bravery of its sons and your conspicuous initiative, I express to your excellency by warmest appreciation.

"Upon Col.-Gen. von Eichhorn, who guided the movemnt of the army with such prudence, I confer the Order Pour Le Merite, and upon Gen Litzmann, whose arrangement along the attacking front secured a victory —the Oak Leaves of Merit."

Similar despatches were sent to Generals von Eichhorn and Litzmann.

Green Hose Was Attractive Bait

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 19.—A piebald old horse, a pretty girl, a neatly turned ankle and calf, the latter two encased in green silken hose, caused much excitement on Smithfield St. yesterday afternoon.

The old horse was standing in front of a department store contentedly dozing, when the girl with the green hose, tripping across the street, hesitated in front of him, and to prevent her skirt from dragging on the curb, lifted it a trifle high, just in front of the old piebald's eye.

The colour scheme evidently reminded the old nag of green pastures, for he quickly reached out his almost toothless jaws, and began nibbling at the "green."

With a scream the girl was off, while the crowd that gathered gazed with unfeigned admiration on the old plug.

Voice of The People

To the Editor, the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—On behalf of a large number of estimable citizens I wish to protest against the plain insinuations against the morality and good name of many people who frequent the Otonabee River, as published in the Daily Review this week. Unquestionably it is a low, mean, and unwarranted attack against dozens of young people of irreproachable character, for the instigator of the article has caused them to be placed in the same position as those who may be guilty of the misconduct he alleges, but which, I venture to say, he could never prove, provided it did exist. Why, therefore, should this man, who professes to know so much, expose to suspicion those highly respectable and innocent persons who make use of the river solely for the recreation and enjoyment it offers.

The article published in your contemporary in my opinion indicates mighty poor judgment, as it far from voices the feelings of the campers and township residents as investigation has proved. It undoubtedly was inspired by one of those unfortunate, prurient, evil-minded individuals who like to harbour such thoughts in connection with the young people of today, and who judge almost entirely on appearances and by hearsay.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, and trusting this may lead to a retraction of such false insinuations against our innocent young patrons of the river, I am,

Yours respectfully,
OUTING.

tery draft, is the third son of Mr. and Mrs. Hagerman, Hunter street, East, to join the Canadian forces. A fourth son may join the artillery next week. All were born in Canada.

A similar good record is shown by the Blanchard family. George Blanchard, who left this morning with the Artillery recruits, is a son of Lieut. Blanchard, V.S., of Peterborough, at present in France with the Army Veterinary Corps, and a brother of Lance Corp. Bruce Blanchard of the 21st Battalion, C.E.F.

The recruiting epidemic seems to hit some families hard and leave others untouched. "Scottie" McKinlay, who has enlisted with the infantry, is the third brother to enlist in Peterborough. Pte. Sam McKinlay of the 2nd Battalion is missing since Langemarck, and Pte. Bill McKinlay left with one of the drafts from the 5th C. M. R. and is now in England.

A Presentation.

The choir of All Saints' Anglican church said farewell to one of their members last night, in the person of Mr. George Melton, who has joined the infantry for overseas service. They assembled at the home of his parents at 534 Park street and a very happy time was spent in songs and mirth. During the evening Mr. Melton was presented with a case of military brushes set in ebony.

The choirmaster, Mr. Geo. Chandler, in a few remarks, testified how sorry the choir were to lose such a valued member and requested that he take the best wishes of the choir and hopes for a speedy return. Mrs. Burrell then made the presentation.

Mr. Melton thanked the choir, saying how much he should value the present, and trusted to be with them again soon. This is the second recruit from All Saints' choir, Mr. Harold Farr being now in training with the C.M.R. in England.

Ormond Girvan, the book-keeper of the Calcutt Brewing and Malting Co., who left this morning with the draft for the 33rd Battery, was presented with a wrist watch by his fellow employees yesterday. He has been connected with the establishment for a number of years.

"Made Good" on the Battle Line Returns Home to Take Bride

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 19. For the first time since a German submarine attempted to torpedo and shell her, several weeks ago, the steamship Orduna, of the Cunard line, arrived Monday with 30 first, 110 second, and seventy-eight third cabin passengers. Her trip through the war zone was uneventful, no hostile craft having been sighted.

Among the passengers was D. C. Thompson, a newspaper reporter and photographer, who had been on the firing line in France for many months. Mr. Thompson is returning to marry Miss Lucile Arseneau, of No. 4,060 Grand Boulevard, Chicago. From his own story, Mr. Thompson went to the front to "make good" in the eyes of his fiancee, and the fact that the wedding is to take place in September is evidence that he succeeded. While at Dixmeude he was wounded seriously and was confined to a hospital for six weeks. Miss Arseneau wrote to him, and declared that she was coming to him, but he decided he soon would be well enough to make the journey to the United States. With him he brought many pictures which, he says prove conclusively the reports of German and Austrian atrocities, including snapshots depicting the brutality of the Kaiser's soldiers. After the wedding Mr. Thompson expects to take his bride to Italy.

Miss Mabelle Linscott, formerly an American Red Cross nurse, who was in France at the beginning of the war, returned after many months in the French hospitals. She told of the hard duty which nurses are performing and state that on many occasions she was on duty for fifty hours.

"The heavy work came after the news of a battle," said Miss Linscott. "When we heard of a battle we were compelled to clear the hospital of the slightly wounded to make room for those who were being brought from the front. That meant forty and fifty hours' work without rest."

Miss Linscott lives at No. 511 Beacon street, Boston. After she has rested she will return to her work in France.

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

(d) Looting, Burning, and Destruction of Property.

There is an overwhelming mass of evidence of the deliberate destruction of private property by the German soldiers. The destruction in most cases was effected by fire, and the German troops, as will be seen from various passages in the report, had been provided beforehand with appliances for rapidly setting fire to houses. Among the appliances enumerated by witnesses are syringes for squirting petrol, guns for throwing small inflammable bombs, and small pellets made of inflammable material. Specimens of the last mentioned have been shown to members of the committee. Besides burning houses, the German frequently smashed furniture and pictures, they also broke in doors and windows. Frequently, too, they defiled houses by relieving the wants of nature upon the floor. They also appear to have perpetrated the same vileness upon piled-up heaps of provisions so as to destroy what they could not themselves consume. They also on numerous occasions, threw corpses into wells, or left in them the bodies of persons murdered by drowning.

In addition to these acts of destruction, the German troops both in Belgium and France are proved to have been guilty of persistent looting. In the majority of cases the looting took place from houses, but there is also evidence that German soldiers and even officers robbed their prisoners both civil and military, of sums of money and other portable possessions it was apparently well known throughout the German army that towns and villages would be burned whenever it appeared that any civilians had fired upon the German troops, and there is reason to suspect that this known intention of the German military authorities in some cases explains the sequence of events which led up to the burning and sacking of a town or village. The soldiers, knowing that they would have an opportunity of plunder if the place was condemned, had a motive for arranging some incident which would provide the necessary excuse for condemnation. More than one witness alleges that shots coming from the window of a house were fired by German soldiers who had for of their way into the house for the purpose of thus creating an alarm. It is also alleged that German soldiers on some occasions merely fired their rifles in the air in a side street and then reported to their officers that they had been fired at. On the report that firing had taken place orders were given for the wholesale destruction, and houses were destroyed in streets and districts where there was no allegation that firing had taken place, as well as in those where the charge arose. That the destruction could have been limited is proved by the care taken to preserve particular houses where occupants had made themselves in one way or another agreeable to the commanders. These houses were marked in chalk, ordering them to be spared, and spared they were.

The above statements have reference to the burning of towns and villages. In addition, the German troops in numerous instances have set fire to farm houses and farm buildings. Here, however, the plea of military necessity can more safely be alleged. A farm house may afford convenient shelter to an enemy, and where such use is probable it may be urged that the destruction is justifiable. It is clearly, however, the duty of soldiers who destroy the buildings, to give reasonable warning to the occupants so that they may escape. Doubtless this was in many cases done by the German commanders, but there is testimony that in some cases the burning of the farmhouse was accompanied by the murder of the inhabitants. The same fact stands out clearly in the more extensive burning of houses in towns and villages. In some cases, indeed, as a prelude to the burning, inhabitants were cleared out of their houses and driven along the street, often with much accompanying brutality—some to a place of execution, others to a prolonged detention in a church or other public buildings. In other cases witnesses assert that they saw German soldiers forcing back into the flames," men, women and children who were trying to escape from the burning houses. There is also evidence that soldiers deliberately shot down civilians as they fled from the fire.

The general conclusion is that the burning and destruction of property which took place was only in a very small minority of cases justified by military necessity, and that even then the destruction was seldom accompanied by that care for the lives of non-combatants which has hitherto been expected from a military commander belonging to a civilized nation. On the contrary, it is plain that in many cases German officers and soldiers deliberately added to the sufferings of the unfortunate people whose property they were destroying.

Offences Against Combatants.
(a) The Killing of the Wounded and of Prisoners.

In dealing with the treatment of the wounded and of prisoners and the cases in which the former appear to have been killed when helpless, and the latter at, or after, the moment of capture, we are met by some peculiar difficulties, because such acts may not in all cases be deliberate and cold-blooded violations of the usages of war. Soldiers who are advancing over a spot where the wounded have fallen may conceivably think that some of those lying prostrate and shamming dead, or, at any rate, are so slightly wounded as to be able to attack, or to fire from behind when the advancing line has passed, and thus they may be led into killing those whom they would otherwise have spared. There will also be instances in which men, infuriated with the frenzy of battle, slay even those whom, in reflection, they might have seen to be incapable of further harming them. The same kind of fury may vent itself on persons who are already surrendering, and even a soldier who is usually self-controlled or humane may, in the heat of the moment, go on killing especially in a general melee, those who are offering to surrender. This is most likely to happen when such a soldier has been incensed by an act of treachery, or is spurred to revenge by the death of a comrade to whom he is attached. Some cases of this kind appear in the evidence. Such things happen in all wars as isolated instances, and the circumstances may be pleaded in extenuation of acts otherwise shocking. We have made due allowance for these considerations, and have rejected those cases in which there is a reasonable doubt as to whether those who killed the wounded knew that the latter was completely disabled. Nevertheless, after making all allowances, there remain certain instances in which it is clear that quarter was refused to persons desiring to surrender when it ought to have been given, or that persons already so wounded as to be incapable of fighting further were wantonly shot or bayoneted.

Serum Drives Tetanis From War Zone, Surgeon Finds

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug 19—Dr Willard Hutchings, chief surgeon of the Pere Marquette Railroad, and whose home is in Detroit, arrived here yesterday aboard the Orduna, of the Cunard line. At the St. Regis, where he is staying, Dr. Hutchings told some of his experiences in Germany, France, England, Switzerland and Italy, where he has been travelling for the last six months. His main idea in going abroad was to study lockjaw, but soon after his arrival in Europe he discovered that the prophylactic use of serum had practically obliterated tetanus.

"It is one of the medical wonders of the war," said Dr. Hutchings. "Before the war we knew a good deal about lockjaw, but now there practically is no tetanus. Every soldier had in his outfit anti-tetanic serum. It is so in all armies. The soldiers in the same way have serum for cholera and typhoid. The German's experiences with the anti-typhoid serum has not been as good as that of the Allies. They say that it is a fake, but they are wrong.

"Sir Almroth Wright was the discoverer and it is, perhaps, on account of his nationality that they cannot believe it's good. I found the German medical service wonderful. Soon after I discovered that tetanus practically was a thing of the past I offered my services to the French Minister of War and he assigned me to the Supreme General and I managed to do work for the French. But in the end there were few wounded, partly because there was not much fighting and also on account of the fact that the French believe in sending their wounded to the coast or seashore hospitals.

"The French have a wonderful new medical appliance in what they call the electro magnet. If a bullet is concealed in the flesh the magnet is placed very close to the skin surface and the bullet is found by the trembling caused by the magnet. It makes X-rays a thing of the past in this particular operation. It also must be remembered that almost every wound and fracture is infected.

"Another wonder of the war on the surgical side is the use of the antiseptic made by mixing chloride of lime and boracic acid in equal parts with a small amount of water. It released hypochlorus acid gas and this destroys all sorts of spores. It promises to be the greatest antiseptic found. Dr. Carrel received credit for the new antiseptic, but long before Dr. Carrel's paper was read in the French Academy of Medicine there was mention of it in the British Medical Journal.

"After having seen Europe I am of the opinion that the United States can't have too big an army and navy. We are hated more than the English in Germany, and we are not too well liked in the other countries.

"On one occasion in a small cafe in Berlin an American, who did not speak a word of German, was seated with me. He ordered a Honolulu sunset, composed of rye brandy, cherry brandy and green curacoa. They heard us talking English and the German shouted to the proprietor that he ought to put out dogs who spoke that language. I retaliated in German without my friend knowing that there was even a row going on. Presently the German shot out his fist at me and as I dodged he struck my companion. There was a quick American movement, and the last I saw of the German he was on the tile sidewalk

Women Work In Krupp Plant

Special Cable to The Examiner:

GENEVA, Aug 19—Official figures show that on June 1, about 5,000 young men were employed at the Krupp Works at Essen, as compared with 1,329 on January 1. The whole number of employees on June 1 is not given. On January 1 the total was 46,928, exclusive of the employees in the associated industries—mining and shipbuilding—and in the ammunition works in other parts of Germany owned by the Krupps.

ST. SWITHEN'S TIME HAS EXPIRED

St. Swithin, the martyr who takes a horrible revenge by causing the rain to descend for forty days if by any chance a shower should fall on the anniversary of his birthday, has had his innings this year, came to an end yesterday, when the forty days will have expired. St. Swithin may have been a fine man, and his friends may have been many, but that does not apply to this age. The most unpopular man, if the old saw is right, especially with the farmers, is St. Swithin. That is, of course, if he is responsible for the forty days rain.

May Have the "Ripper" Murderer

Special Wire to The Examiner

BALTIMORE, Aug 19—Grace Elliott, a forlorn woman, locked in a cell in the Southern Police Station, on a charge of drunkenness, told Captain John J. Santry of the local police, that her sweetheart, known as Edward Jones, was the slayer of five-year-old Leonore Anna Cohn and four-year-old Charlie Murray, in New York, last spring. Jones is under arrest on a charge of defrauding his landlord. The police believe his real name to be Attillie Fasco.

"This thing's been eating the heart out of me," the woman screamed. "It's been haunting me and I'm going to get it off my mind. I'm giving you this even though he is my lover. He's the man who killed both these kids in New York last spring. He killed the little Cohn girl and then the Murray boy. He's your 'Jack the Ripper.' If you think I'm lying, investigate my story. Tip off the New York 'cops' and see how quickly they will jump down here.

Clothes Blood-Stained.

"I was a cook in Bellevue Hospital, New York. He was an orderly. On the night of March 10th he came home and I saw his clothes were smeared with blood.

"'What's the matter with your clothes?' I asked him. He told me he killed a little girl and told me to keep my mouth shut. I was in love with him, loved him more than anything else in the world."

Then, according to the police, the woman said her admirer came home soon after in the same blood-stained condition. This time, she said, he confessed having killed a boy. The next day, she says, she read about the second murder.

Soon thereafter she and Jones went to Washington, whence they came to Baltimore.

"If you're real cops you'll hang on to Jones," the woman cried.

Sullen and Threatening.

Jones, or Fasco, was arrested on Sunday. The complainant was a boarding house keeper from South Baltimore. Jones was sullen and threatening and refused to talk about himself. But the woman followed him to the police station. She was drunk and was ordered out. She went, but returned, still drunk, and the lieutenant on the desk ordered her locked up.

In her cell she began to talk incoherently about "the ripper." Over and over she repeated the word "ripper, ripper, ripper." Mrs. Rudolph, the matron, caught the word and listened.

"What do you mean—'ripper'?" asked the matron.

"Now that you got him, hold him!" snarled the woman. "They can hold him, can't they? Call the Captain. I'll tell him. I'll tell the Captain something that'll open his eyes."

"Well, what do you want to tell me?" demanded Captain Santry.

"Just this," she replied. "Do you know that you've got the man that the whole country's been looking for, the killer of the children in New York?"

Herman Pesler, lieutenant of detectives, went to Jones' cell and began to question the man. Jones was surly. Pesler urged the man to tell of his movements since February 24. The man, according to Pesler, made many conflicting statements.

"You're a liar," yelled Pesler. "Why are you lying to me? Are you afraid of telling something that'll get you in trouble?"

"None of your business," retorted Jones.

NEW YORK, Aug 19—Police Lieutenant Patrick Gilden who is now searching for the ripper murderer of five-year-old Leonore Ann Cohn and of four-year-old Charlie Murray, over since these children were killed the girl in March 10 and the boy on May 3, has come to Baltimore to investigate a report that one Edward Jones, held a prisoner there, is the slayer of the children. A woman known as Grace Jones, who lived with the man in New York and Baltimore, has denounced him to the Baltimore police, saying that he confessed both murders to her on the nights on which they were committed. Her story was telegraphed to Police Headquarters in New York and Lieutenant Gilden left at once.

Heavy Storms In the West

Examiner Special:

Saskatoon, Sask., Aug 19—The worst electrical storm of the year occurred Tuesday night. There is every appearance that it was general, but it was apparently unaccompanied by rain, and the rain was noticeably very warm. Little wind accompanied the rain and it is believed that no flattening of ment crops will result. The harvesting operations however will be seriously delayed by the great amount of water which fell.

Edmonton, Alberta, Aug 18—The worst rainstorm of the year broke over the city on Tuesday morning and it is probable that considerable damage was done to the heavy standing grain by the rain, although the absence of any wind will lessen this to some extent.

WOULD NOT CONVICT SLAYERS

Special to The Examiner:

Atlanta, Ga., Aug 19—While Leo M. Frank's body was nearing his mother's home in Brooklyn yesterday Governor Nat. Harris returned to the state capital from Forsyth, Ga., to commence his investigation into the lynching of Georgia's most famous prisoner.

Thirty six hours after the mob visited the state prison farm at Milledgeville and there stole away from the guards the man whose case has aroused millions of people to his defence, not one arrest has been made in connection with his death. Furthermore, the acting sheriff of Cobb county said that no arrests would be made "because no grand jury could be found that would indict anyone for being a party to the kidnapping and lynching."

Governor Harris announced that he would take such steps as will bring the guilty to justice.

Archduke Karl Stephan, Minister of American Relief Funds, succeeds to the throne of Austria and is protected.

Kitchener Visits the Front And Inspects Battle Line

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Aug 19.—A joint inspection of parts of the western battle line was made Monday by Lord Kitchener, Great Britain's Secretary of War, and Alexander Millerand, the French War Minister. They were accompanied part of the time by Gen. Joffre and Sir John French. Commanders-in-Chief of the French and British armies. The military leaders paid particular attention to conditions in the Champagne and the Woevre.

An official note, which gives details of the trip, says Lord Kitchener and M. Millerand were greatly impressed by the splendid appearance of the troops and their high morale. Several conferences were held, but the nature of them is not disclosed.

Speaking at the close of a dinner Tuesday evening M. Millerand declared he felt highly honoured by Lord Kitchener's visit to France, and was glad to learn from the British Field Marshal's own lips of the complete accord uniting the two nations. Addressing the British War Minister directly, he said: "Yours is not the only voice which praises our soldiers, for the enemy also gives them their due. After a year of war the enemy no longer has illusions of winning. He predicts internal dissensions among his enemies which he hopes will occur. Already he is endeavouring to incite neutrals and places before belligerents veiled innuendos of peace.

France Never More United.

"Let me assure you France is united. People, Parliament and Government never have been more firmly determined, in close accord with our heroic and faithful allies, never to lay down our arms until the day arrives when we shall have attained our goal, and if the road to Tipperary is long, the price is sufficiently high to justify us paying for all the delays, difficulties and sadness along the road, because the price is liberation of the world."

Lord Kitchener, speaking in French, thanked M. Millerand for his kindness in extending an invitation to visit the French front, and said that after seeing the splendid troops of Gen. Joffre he could understand the French victories. He closed by declaring that Great Britain was resolved to make the greatest possible effort to aid France and to carry the war to a finish.

THE PERFECT PIE.

(By Peter McArthur.)

Probably no dish that ever appeared on our tables has caused so much burning as the pie—and I do not mean by that to suggest the connection between heartburn and indigestion. The pie with the hunting case crust has eclipsed many a honeymoon. The unsuccessful pie has been the uncharted rock on the sea of matrimony, the slough of despond on the straight and narrow path. But the good pie, the perfect pie has been from time immemorial the peace-maker, the healer of lovers' quarrels. The great outstanding fact of married life is that man wants pie. A. Scott did not exactly say

Lives there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to his wife hath said,
"I wish that you would learn to bake Pies like my mother used to make."

But I have known a man to do even worse than that. I have known a man to say to his wife: "I wish you could make pies like your mother used to make." In that way he rebuked her and made friends with his mother-in-law, a feat of diplomacy never equalled in the chancelleries of Europe.

But the question has been raised: "What kind of pie was it that mother used to make. What was her masterpiece?"

There is no need of any dispute on this subject. Just wait till you find one of those old-fashioned pie-making mothers and listen to what she is singing to the grandchild on her knee.

"Can she make a cherry pie
Billy Boy, Billy Boy?
Can she make a cherry pie,
Charming Billy?
She can make a cherry pie
While a cat can wink its eye
But she's a young thing, and can't leave her marry-O".

When the biggest cherry trees that are now laden with ruddy fruit were mere seedlings, that song was as popular as Tipperary is today, and there are still merry grandmothers who sing it to their marriageable grandsons when they go a-wooing. In the good old days before there were pie factories where pies are made by machines and should be eaten by machines the making of a cherry pie was the ultimate test of a housekeeper. No girl was accounted worthy of a home who could not make a perfect cherry pie.

And this is the season of the cherry pie. Let me whisper something. Every girl should show that she is able to make cherry pies. Every love-lorn boy should see that the girl he loves is able to make them. A word to the wise is sufficient—though in this

Curtain Suggestions

The curtaining of a house will make it or mar it, and too little thought, as a rule, is given to this subject. The average house is badly curtained—and this generally means extravagance as well. Take for example the case of lace curtains. The woman with no knowledge of household decorations invariably buys lace curtains for use at all of the windows down stirs. She regards them as safe and conservative, yet she could hardly make a poorer selection. Few persons can afford really good lace curtains, and cheap lace is in the worst of taste. Also the original cost of cheap lace is greater than that of a simpler material, and the laundering is expensive.

Choose a simple material for your inner white curtain scrim, dotted swiss or a good quality of cheesecloth. The cheesecloth has advantages. It does not need starch, it hangs in very graceful folds and it is most inexpensive.

The white curtains should hang straight on either side of the window and be finished across the top of the upper sash with a valance or ruffle that cuts off the skyline. Never use ruffles on the edges of curtains, for they spell the line of the window.

The English method of sash curtaining is peculiarly edsirable for bedrooms—straight, plain curtains, two for the upper sash and two for the lower. This enables one to side the upper half of the window and leave the lower half light, thus obviating the necessity for shades. Shades are inherently ugly and should be used as little as possible. If you feel that you must use shades however, do your best to make them harmonious.

A pretty idea for bedroom shades is to plant a border on a plain white shade to match the design of the wallpaper of chintz used in the apartment design is not difficult to produce.

Chintz curtains are best for bedrooms where a plain paper is used. If the paper is figured, the curtain should be plain.

Sunfast material is excellent for curtains. It comes in attractive colours, and hangs in graceful folds. The original cost is rather high, but it pays for itself in wear. There are several varieties of so-called "sunfast" material on the market. Buy only the qualities that are guaranteed. They cost a trifle more, but are worth the difference.

There are lovely shades of yellow and rose in the sunfast silks that make most desirable curtains, as they temper the light to a soft and becoming glow.

THE HONOUR ROLL.

"Somewhere in France" — 'twas all the message said
For home and king his strong young life he gave,
And "somewhere," too, with other hero dead,
They laid him in a nameless soldier's grave.

"Somewhere at home" a mother weeps red-eyed,
Nor heeds the chorus of a nation's praise.
We proudly tell how valiantly he died
But she, poor thing, but counts the lonely days.

The days that lengthen into weary years
Of haunting memories and of poignant grief;
The empty days that hold a thousand tears,
Whose ceaseless flow shall never find relief.

We write his name upon the golden scroll
That holds the muster of the Empire's dead,
Who tribute paid to cruel War's red toll
But do we spare a thought for her bowed head?

'Tis meet and right to praise the fallen brave;
There is a debt no tribute can repay;
But she who, red-eyed, sees a new-made grave
Say, should she not be in our thoughts to-day?

The hearts of mother, sister, wife do plead
Most for remembrance, nor shall be denied.
They gave their all in Britain's hour of need,
In Britain's grateful heart they shall abide.

MAGIC

A Cologne professor, gnashing his teeth over what he calls "the English magic," says the Germans must study it and overcome it by stronger magic, "the unpretentious and genuine charm of the German character." He has figured with other Germans that India and Egypt were bound to rise against the oppressor, that the Boers and the Irish would revenge themselves for conquest or defeat, that the overseas dominions would do nothing for England, who gave them no preferential tariff, and that the British themselves, grown cowardly and degenerate, would not fight. What the Cologne professor sees, is of course the reverse of all this, and he lays it to a sort of malign, snake-like magic in the English eye.

It is hard to say which is most amusing, the idea of German science mastering the plenty big juju of England, as they would say in Senegambia, or overmastering it with the bigger juju of German Kultur, or the naive assurance the professor gives his readers of the "genuine charm" of the Kruppited Kultur. On the other hand, it is the easiest thing for any Briton, Boer or Indian to explain to the goggle-bogies in German schools that the "English magic" is nothing but pot freedom, this only is the magic we have used, don't you see. But they won't see, these nemais. As for the bigger juju that Germany would develop, poison gas is not likely to make a host of converts.—London Advertiser.

TWO AMERICANS NUMBERED AMONG MISSING

List of Saved From White Star Liner Numbers Three Hundred and Seventy-five Two Americans Reported Among Missing

President Wilson and Secretary Lansing Receive Full Details of Disaster---Recall of Bernstorff and American Ambassador at Berlin Likely to Be Asked For.

DIPLOMATIC BREAK LIKELY TO FOLLOW

Special Morning Cable

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—The White Star officials announce that a revised list shows 20 persons missing from the Arabic, two of whom are Americans. The list of saved is 375.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—President Wilson and Secretary Lansing received full details regarding the sinking of the Arabic. It is thought likely the recall of Bernstorff may be asked for and Gerard recalled from Berlin.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—There is official disposition to deprecate the suggestion that at the worst the Arabic affair meant war between Germany and the United States, though it looks as if a diplomatic break must follow if official accounts bear out unofficial ones. It was stated on high authority that the administration will do everything to avoid trouble with Germany, believing the country is opposed to hostility. Germany will be given a chance to tell her side of the story, and the American Embassy will report before any decision is reached by the Government.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—On the receipt of news of the loss of the Arabic, President Wilson immediately called a conference to deal with the matter which will be serious if Americans were aboard.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—The general manager of the White Star Line stated last night that officials had no information about the report that a large amount of gold was aboard the Arabic. The loss of the ship was fully covered by British Government insurance.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—White Star officials states that Captain Finch of the Arabic reports she was torpedoed without warning, and that 375 survivors have been landed at Queenstown.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—Mr. De Lorrmier, son-in-law of Canadian Minister of Marine Brodeur, has been landed at Queenstown from the Arabic disaster.

Capt Wooten, R.N.R.—Skipper of the C.N.R. liner Royal Edward, which was torpedoed by a Hun submarine on Saturday. Capt Wooten is supposed to have been on board the ship at the time of the disaster. His ship was built originally for the Mediterranean service where it was known as the Cito, and it was in these waters that she met her doom ultimately.

LITTLE CONFUSION AMONG THE PASSENGERS---BEHAVED IN A CALM, ORDERLY MANNER

Men Who Passed Through Other Sea Disasters Said That Nothing Impressed Them So Much as the Quiet Way in Which Passengers Got Over the Sides Within 11 Minutes After Vessel Was Struck.

Special Morning Cable

QUEENSTOWN, Aug. 20.—No survivor of the Arabic disaster interviewed here to-day say the German submarine that sent the big liner to the bottom, though several said they saw a U-boat that a few minutes before torpedoed the British steamer Dunsley, and believed it was the same submarine. They agreed, that the Arabic was sent to the bottom without warning. The heavy blow struck by the torpedo rocked the steamer with a violent explosion until she sank beneath the waves. There was little confusion among either passengers or crew. Men who had passed through other sea disasters said to-day that nothing impressed them so much as the calm, orderly manner in which passengers got over the sides within eleven minutes after the vessel was struck.

The drowned were in two boats which capsized almost immediately after they struck the water. One of them was caught up by the liner as she rolled over in her death plunge. Some of the occupants struggled to rafts and clung fast until they were picked up by other boats. Those who could not swim went down beneath the waves rolled up by the sinking Arabic. Several of the crew, it is believed, were blown to pieces when the torpedo plunged into the vessel's side.

Some survivors landed here were suffering from severe bruises. They had been thrown about violently when the explosion shook the Arabic. Probably a score of women, who escaped in their night clothes, were still under the care of physicians to-day, suffering from exposure. None of the injured, it was believed, will die.

Most of the passengers were on deck or at breakfast when we were struck, said Jos. G. Delorimer, the Montreal Lawyer, and son-in-law of Former Canadian Minister of Marine. Possibly fifty of the passengers were still in their berths.

It was about 9 o'clock or a little after when several of us sighted what we thought was a submarine quite a distance to the starboard approaching the steamer. We later found out it was the Dunsley of London. While we were watching, we caught a faint sound of an explosion, and took it for granted that the Dunsley had been torpedoed.

ITALIANS SUFFER FROM FROSTBITE

Special to The Examiner:

Rome, Aug. 20 Even at this season of the year there are many of the Italian soldiers suffering from frost bite and the gangrene which follows. These cases are among the men serving as outposts on mountain summits, some of them 12,000 feet above sea level, where they stand practically motionless for hours at a time. The danger of freezing will increase with the approaching winter and appeals have been made to all classes, besides factories, to hasten the preparation of warmer garments of every description for these exposed sentries. By private initiative 5,000 warm garments are being made daily.

WITH THE FRENCH WOUNDED

The Woman's Sacrifice

LONDON, Aug. 19, 6:30 p.m. Away from the battlefield one sees war stripped of its glamour. We see the heroic work of nurses who are on duty day and night. There is devotion, self-sacrifice, suffering patriotism—qualities which only a great war and its terrible consequences can inspire to the highest development. The women everywhere are helping and everywhere one sees self-sacrifice and devotion to country.

The women of Canada do not know how fortunate they are. Here there are plenty of women who suffer in silence, whose strength is out of proportion to their ambition. Their hands are tied by some chronic disease common to womankind; that weak back, accompanied by pain here or there, extreme nervousness, sleeplessness, maybe, fainting spells or spasms, are all signals of distress for women. She may be growing from girlhood into womanhood, passing from womanhood to motherhood. At any or all of these periods of a woman's life she should take a tonic and nervine, prescribed for just such cases by a physician of vast experience in the diseases of women. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has successfully treated more cases the past fifty years than any other known remedy. When you feel dull, headachy, backachy, dizzy, or perhaps hot flashes, there is nothing you can accomplish, nothing you can enjoy. You can find permanent relief in Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is sold by medicine dealers, or trial box by mail from Dr Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo N. Y., on receipt of 50 cents, or one dollar for large box.—Adv.

Dr Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

French Troops After Hard Fighting Gain Trenches in Artois and Vosges

Special Cable to The Examiner

LONDON, Aug. 20.—French troops after hard fighting, gained a portion of the trenches in Artois and in the Vosges.

CARDIFF, Aug. 20.—The British steamer Restemel was sunk by a German submarine to-day. Her crew was landed safely.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Norwegian steamer Magda, the sixth victim of a German submarine attack, was sunk yesterday. The crew was saved.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 20.—Recent Russian successes on the left bank of the River Bug, where the Germans have been pushed back to Vlodava, have allayed fears for Kovol.

BERLIN, Aug. 20.—The Admiralty announced a naval fight off the coast of Jutland on Tuesday in which a small British cruiser and torpedo boat were sunk.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 20.—Russian fleet protecting Riga drew closer in before a superior enemy fleet yesterday, the Russians stubbornly retiring in the Baltic Provinces.

MILAN, Aug. 20.—Tension between Italy and Turkey is increasing. It is expected after a meeting of the Cabinet Council to-day, war will be declared. An Italian fleet is ordered to prepare.

CANADA CAPACITY ASTOUNDS PEOPLE IN GREAT BRITAIN

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Astonishment is expressed at the Ottawa statement that the British Government orders in Canada for war supplies have now reached the enormous total of $230,000,000. The English public little realize the importance of the aid Canadian industrialism is capable of rendering in the present war.

The Pall Mall Gazette says General Bertram's figures are "a remarkable demonstration of the capacity and vitality of Canada as a manufacturing centre. The more we can depend on Canada and the other dominions in this respect the better it will be. Hats off to our Lady of the Snows."

Financial authorities here estimate that this enormous Canadian exportation of war supplies, added to the confident expectation of greatly increased breadstuff exports, will be of the greatest assistance in easing the Anglo-Canadian economic situation. It is estimated that allowing for increased acreage and yield per acre the Canadian total export to the British market for the current year may reach the enormous total of $500,000,000 as compared with $225,000,000 in the year before the war.

When Premier Borden returns to London he hopes to be able to announce the conclusion of arrangements with the British Government for the speedy shipment of the Canadian harvest at a reasonable freight. I am informed the matter is still under close attention of the British authorities.

Ready For the "Big Surprise"

Examiner Special:

New York, Aug. 20 Reasons for the delayed British advance are put forward by the New York Tribune on the information received from recent arrivals from England. Their explanation, the Tribune says is that Lord Kitchener has been waiting to launch his great surprise, and this surprise lies in the completion of new guns and a new type of shell which it is believed will revolutionize artillery operations.

"The combined efforts of British chemists and ordnance experts has invented a shell unquestionably more powerful than any previously used. There has now been produced a 17-inch gun that will stand the strain of this shell. Various experiments have been made and are believed to have been entirely successful. It is stated that the shell will be carried twenty-five miles and will work havoc on a scale entirely unprecedented.

"Last Wednesday the second Canadian contingent sailed for France. With them departed Kitchener's movement was ready to begin."

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. If you want to sell something, it is easier to have the buyers come to you. If you want to buy something you save time and energy if the sellers come to you. It is quite possible to have your head save your heels, to have others come to you instead of you going after them.

An advertisement in the paper will accomplish the result. Give adequate particulars of just what your needs are, or what you have to offer and some person who wants what you have, either cash or goods, will look you up.
